'GOOD OLD BAD OLD DAYS'

San Rafael's 1974-vintage citizens belt out a chorus of "Good Old Bad Old Days" to recall the county seat's beginnings while Don Timoteo Murphy, (Paul McMullen) postures from a pedestal, in a dress rehearsal of the opening scene of "Jubilee." # Police, FBI Net Fails In SLA Trio Capture

Raid In Los Angeles Follows Store Incident

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Police and FBI agents tracked down three suspected members of the Symbionese Liberation Army, kidnapers of Patricia Hearst, to a small house in a black district today but when they broke into the structure the trio had already fled.

A man and two women, all white, were reported holed up in the building which was surrounded by more than 75 FBI agents and scores of officers armed with guns and tear gas.

Cannisters of the tear gas were fired through the building and, when there was no movement or reaction from inside, agents entered the house and found that it was empty.

William Sullivan, head of the Los Angeles FBI office, said they found ammunition, food, suitcases, wigs and clothing.

"It indicated the people had left very hurriedly," he said.

Sullivan said he believed the suspects might still be in the Los Angeles area.

Asked if one of the women might have been 20-year-old Patricia Hearst herself, Sullivan said "there is no evidence she was here."

Two of the three persons were tentatively identified as William Taylor Harris, 29, one of the SLA founders, and his wife, Emily, 27. The third was described as a "very good looking girl in her early 20s with a pale complexion."

Authorities got on the trail of the three after an incident in a sporting goods store area in which the man believed to be Harris was stopped by a store employee for shoplifting.

He drew a gun but in a scuffle with the clerk, dropped the pistol to the sidewalk. Its registration was traced to Emily Harris.

Harris and one of the women ran to a waiting red and white Volkswagen van where a third woman was at the wheel. The woman in the van fired about 30 shots from a machine gun back at the building but no one was injured.

They abandoned the Volkswagen and commandeered a Pontiac. Then they later forced another man to give them his blue and white Nova.

Linda Ensley, 19, who lives next door to the white house on the edge of Watts, said she had seen two women going in and out of the building the last several days. She said they usually did not emerge until late in the day and appeared to be wearing wigs, one red and one black.

Sullivan said he believed the trio would have returned to the building if it had not been for the sporting goods store incident yesterday.

Sullivan was asked why he thought the SLA members had come to Los Angeles.

"They got pressure in the San

Hub Sewage Project Worrying Merchants

Construction is proceeding on schedule, and contractors say they have minimized street digging, but San Anselmo merchants indicated yesterday that they still are apprehensive about business slumps that may result from installation of new sewer pipelines in the city this summer.

Wary of another businessmen's protest like the one that erupted last year when delays plagued the first phase of the sewer project, an official of the Ross Valley Sanitary District yesterday tried to reassure members of the San Anselmo Chamber of Commerce that the downtown project will be finished on time — by the end of July.

"The district has gone to great pains to do a really good job for the merchants," said Ned J. Ongaro, district manager. "Underground work has replaced street digging wherever possible, and people who are forced to detour will see signs directing them back to the business district."

Several merchants, however, were skeptical of Ongaro's optimistic outlook, and reminded colleagues that business dropped 10 to 40 per cent during the first phase of the project last summer.

"Closing the intersection of San Anselmo Avenue and Tunstead Avenue for two weeks (from June 21 through July 4) will effectively shut down the business district," warned businessman Jim Reed.

"Some of us might as well take a vacation then," muttered another,

Street digging also will be required on Kientz Lane (now through Monday); Tunstead Avenue between Library Place and San Anselmo Avenue (Monday through May 27); Tamalpais Avenue (June 8-15), and San Anselmo Avenue between Tamalpais and Bridge (June 15-21).

The result of street digging will be narrowed lanes, detours, and slowing traffic, according to contractor Alf Burtleson.

Other work to replace 21-inch sewer pipe with 36-inch pipe will be done by boring, an underground process that does not require traffic disruption, he said. Street digging is required in the various locations to give workmen room to begin the bore, or underground tun-

Final Try Made For Cease-Fire

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger proposed "new American ideas" today in a last attempt to get agreement on an Israeli-Syrian cease-fire and military disengagement on the embattled Golan Heights before he leaves the Middle East.

A high American offical in the Kissinger party said Israel and Syria already were as close together as it is possible to get without actually having an agreement. The remaining gap on a cease-fire line was described as more emotional than geographical.

Even while Kissinger conferred with government leaders in Jerusalem, Israeli warplanes carried out a second successive day of retaliation raids into Lebanon for the Arab guerrilla attack on the town of Maalot.

The raids came a few hours after Kissinger deplored the loss of Arab lives in yesterday's air strikes. But an American official said the new violence could not wreck the Kissinger mission.

Kissinger's statement did not outrightly condemn the Israeli air raids, or express the same shock and dismay with which he castigated the Arab guerrilla attack on the Israeli border town.

The high American official said that both Israel and Syria have pleaded with Kissinger, whose mission went into its 20th day yesterday, to make just one more shuttle —his sixth —in the attempt to get agreement now at least on the central issue of drawing a cease-fire line in the Golan Heights.

Flying back from Damascus in the early morning hours, Kissinger met with Prime Minister Golda Meir after only a few hours' sleep to give her the "new approaches" he tried out in a marathon meeting with Syrian President Hafez Assad last night and early today.

Later Kissinger met the full Israeli negotiating team and then Mrs. Meir's entire cabinet met in special session to formulate a stance for Kissinger to take back to Damascus tomorrow.

An American spokesman said after the negotiating session "some new American ideas were discussed on the question of a disengagement agreement between Syria and Israel."

Maps of the Golan Heights front were taken into the two-and-a-half-hour Kissinger meeting with the negotiating team and, afterwards, Information Minister Shimon Peres also said Kissinger had proposed "some American considerations."

The new ideas were believed to deal with the central issue of how and where to draw the cease-fire line in the Golan Heights.

SAN RAFAEL HISTORY IS RELATED

The history of the first 100 years of the City of San Rafael is colorfully highlighted in a 48-page special edition of today's Independent-Journal.

Four sections give a look at San Rafael's goals for at least the early years of its next century, and a frank look at the problems the community faces.

The Centennial edition also focuses on the gala 10-day 100th anniversary celebration the city's residents will begin tonight, with a complete schedule of events on page S-1.

The schedule incorrectly calls Beach Park Road Centennial Way.

Spring Showers For Most Of Marin

Spring showers streaked across Marin County today, ending a dry spell that began April 28. Federal weather forecasters said there is a 30 per cent chance that intermittent showers will continue through tomorrow. The rainfall was expected to be barely enough to measure.

Strong northerly winds that buffeted the Bay Area for the past week eased, but not before they toppled a century-old pine in San Rafael's Gerstle Park yesterday.

Inflation Was Worse Than First Thought

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Inflation picked up even more steam in the first three months of 1974 than government economists first thought while the economy slid further into the hole, Commerce Department figures showed today.

Revised figures on the Gross National Product (GNP) showed economic output dropped at a 6.3 per cent annual rate between January and March, the biggest three-month decline since the first quarter of 1958.

Last month, the department had put the decline at 5.8 per cent as the slumping automobile and housing industries took their toll on the overall economy. But the new figures show even steeper decline and cast a shadow over government forecasts of a healthy upturn in the last half of 1974.

Inflation in the January-March quarter soared at an 11.5 per cent annual rate, the department said —even faster than the unusually heavy 10.8 per cent pace estimated last month.

Not since the first quarter of 1951 when prices rose at a 13 per cent rate, has inflation been so virulent during a three-month period.

The new figures make it marginally more difficult for the economy to recover fast enough in the present three-month period to avert a technical recession. Two straight quarters of negative economic growth is the short hand definition of "recession" although some omists argue that the current slump is not broad enough, nor is unemployment high enough, for the current down-turn to qualify.

The Census Bureau confirmed yesterday that the year-long home building slump still hasn't bottomed out. Starts of privately owned home and apartment units rose 10 per cent over March but building permits, a key indicater of residential construction activity dropped 10 per cent in the same month.

Ceremonial Role Seen For Chou

TAIPEI (UPI) — Chinese Premier Chou En-lai is likely to be kicked upstairs to fill the ceremonial post of head of state, the English language newspaper China News reported yesterday. It quoted a Nationalist Chinese expert on Communist affairs.

The expert, who declined to be identified, predicted that Chou would be promoted to the now vacant office of president of the country in the next couple of months for reasons of failing health.

The 75-year-old Chinese premier is reportedly in poor health.

Prime Rate Raised To Record High

NEW YORK (UPI) — Major banks today raised the interest rate for prime business loans to larger customers to a record 11 ½ per cent.

The New York banks raising the rate from 11 ¼ included First National City and Chase Manhattan, the city's two largest, Chemical Bank, Irving Trust, Bank of New York, Marine Midland and Franklin National.

Most major California banks followed their lead.

Elsewhere, National Bank of Detroit and Mellon Bank of Pittsburgh were the first to go to the new rate which had been expected since First National Bank of Chicago raised its prime rate to 11.4 per cent earlier in the week.

A rise in the prime rate does not immediately affect other interest rates but if the rate keeps going up or remains at record levels for any extended period it is bound in time to affect nearly all interest rates including those on consumer loans.

The prime lending rate has climbed sharply from the 8 ¾ per cent level in mid-March, with almost weekly increases recently as the Federal Reserve has maintained a tight money policy in an effort to discourage loan demand and curb inflation.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Oil Firms To Be Nationalized

CARACAS (UPI) — A high-level commission began working out details today for taking over all foreign oil companies after the government announced plans for the nationalization of Venezuela's petroleum industry.

Peres

President Carlos Andres Peres said last night the government had officially decided to nationalize American and other foreign oil firms in Venezuela, the world's third largest petroleum exporter.

"A new, historic opportunity has opened for Venezuela, Latin America and all the countries which are victims of the economic totalitarianism of the great developed nations," Perez said.

He said Venezuela's oil resources, which have been developed by major international firms such as Exxon, Shell, Gulf and Mobil, "will be, from today on and more than ever, our own history."

COLUMBUS, Ga. (UPI) — Attorneys for former Lt. William L. Calley Jr. asked a federal judge yesterday to order disclosure of government documents relating to the My Lai massacre, including a report compiled by the White House "plumbers" group.

The motion seeks the results of an investigation allegedly done under the direction of former White House aide John Ehrlichman into the My Lai incident.

Close Vote Seen

PARIS (UPI) — France's presidential campaign drew to a close today with opinion polls showing the race so close the outcome may be decided by voters in the country's foreign possessions.

A sampling conducted by the Publimetrie Institute and published in the daily newspaper l'Aurore game conservative Valery Giscard d'Estaing 51 per cent to 49 per cent for Socialist Francois Mitterrand. Other polls gave each 50 per cent.

An estimated 30 million voters will make their choice Sunday.

Bauxite Worry

NEW YORK (UPI) — Six American aluminum companies have warned the Jamaican government that it is risking its huge bauxite ore market by unilaterally increasing the export tax and royalty on bauxite and alumina.

Lawyers for the companies said yesterday that doubling the export tax could mark the start of confrontation over money between major bauxite producing countries and the consuming countries similar to the recent oil price confrontation.

Bauxite is the principal ore used in making aluminum essential in the airlines, auto and structural industries, as well as such household products as foil wrap and beer cans.

New Energy Plan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Energy Administration has proposed a new rule that would lower oil company profits, and possibly gasoline prices.

The rule is aimed specifically at the "transfer price" a U.S. oil firm ays for oil imported from its foreign affiliate. Under existing regulations U.S. oil firms can pass through transfer price increases to the consumer on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Air Base Blocked

SAIGON (UPI) — A combination of monsoon rains and a Communist shelling attack against a government air base today blocked efforts to aid 570 government troops and 3,200 civilians missing behind Communist lines in the central highlands.

The Saigon command said the North Vietnamese shelled a central Vietnam government airfield killing 10 government troops and wounding 31.

In Cambodia, government forces reported killing more than 100 rebels yesterday in fighting near a provincial capital 102 miles northeast of Phnom Penh. There were no reports of government losses.

A Strike Vow

BELFAST (UPI) — Protestant workers vowed today to keep up a crippling strike until Britain calls new elections in Northern Ireland. Gunmen killed a young Roman Catholic mother as she chatted with a friend in a Belfast doorway.

Leaders of the three-day-old strike told Northern Ireland Secretary Merlyn Rees today the province-wide walkout would continue until Britain approved new Assembly elections.

Ford In Hawaii

HONOLULU (UPI) — Vice President Gerald Ford arrived in Hawaii last night for a "working-vacationing weekend," and studiously avoided any public comment on President Nixon, Watergate or impeachment.

The flower-decked and happily smiling vice president arrived at Hickam Air Force Base instead of the Honolulu International Airport. Ford was under heavy guard.

Penny Shortage Getting Serious

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The supermarket industry said today the penny shortage is getting so bad some chain stores may have to start giving customers scrip instead of pennies in change.

The National Association of Food Chains said the only way to prevent that would be for the people who've been hoarding pennies in piggie banks and paper bags to head for the bank and turn them in.

Rising copper prices coupled with the possibility that the Treasury may have to start issuing coins that are not 100 per cent copper has caused hoarding and some melting down of pennies. The Treasury recently increased production and imposed a ban on melting and exporting pennies.

"Yet in the meantime," the association said, "food chain stores are hurting for pennies. Some chains have asked for authority to issue scrip so long as the shortage lasts.

"No one, food chains, the public nor government, wants scrip, yet it may be necessary unless Americans start pouring back hoards of pennies into the stream of circulating currency," it added.

The general counsel's office of the Treasury would have to give permission for any food chain to go to scrip, and a spokesman for the association said the government is very reluctant to allow it.

The spokesman declined to say which chains have actually applied for permission to issue paper instead of pennies in change, but said the situation is now "very critical in Chicago and very critical on the West Coast.

"One store in Chicago needs $6,000 worth of pennies a week to operate," he said. "They went to the banks and could only get a couple of hundred dollars worth."

The association gave these other examples of penny shortagee:

Santa Barbara, Calif.: No rolls of pennies available to chain stores from banks since April.

Oklahoma City: Only 150 pennies per store per day available to food stores.

Phoenix, Ariz.: Only 500 to 2,500 pennies per week available from banks.

Policeman Accused In Shooting Quits

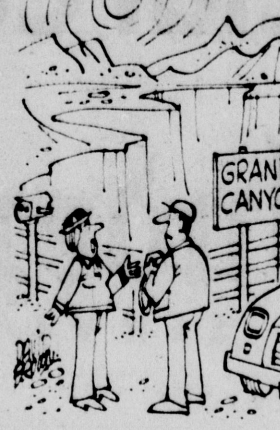
SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A policeman charged in the shooting death of a Santa Rosa man says he has resigned from the force.

John Driscoll, 33, on trial in the slaying of Michael Stinnet, said yesterday he resigned earlier in the day. The officer had already been suspended from duty.

TODAY'S WORLD



"Now you can see what could happen to our back yard if you keep letting it go."

Four Young Blacks Are Indicted In Zebra Case

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Four young Black Muslims were indicted for murder and assault yesterday in the "Zebra" killings that left 13 white victims dead.

The indictments were handed up in San Francisco Superior Court following three days of testimony, including an appearance by an informer who tied the killings to a cult called the "Death Angels."

Indicted were Manuel Moore, 29, J.C. Simon, 29, and Larry C. Green, 22, all of San Francisco. The three were arrested May 1 in a pre-dawn raid. Bail for each was set at $300,000.

Jessie Cooks, already serving a murder term at San Quentin Prison, was also indicted. Cooks had not previously appeared in court in connection with the "Zebra" case.

Assistant District Attorney Walter Giubini told the court that police have the weapons used in 2 shootings and six gunshot assaults.

The indictments charged one or two shooting murder counts against each suspect. Two men, Green and Cooks, face charges for the hacking death of a daughter of a prominent winery owner. This did not fit the random pattern of the dozen murders.

In that case, Green and Cooks were accused of murder, assault and robbery for the Oct. 20, 1973, killing and decapitation of Quita Hague, 28, and the assault of her husband, Richard, 30.

Moore and Simon were indicted for two of four murders during a four-hour period Jan. 28. Tana Smith, 32, a secretary, and Jane Holly, 45, a bank employe, were shot in separate incidents. Moore was also charged with assault in the wounding of Roxanne McMillan, 23, who was shot the same evening outside her apartment.

Moore also was charged with assault in the woundings of Terry White, 15, and Ward Anderson, 30, as they stood at a bus stop April 30.

Four other men were arrested with Moore, Simon and Green, but they were released.

Editorial Reply Bill Is Defeated

TRENTON, N.J. (UPI) — Legislation giving assemblymen and senators the opportunity to respond to newspaper editorials failed to pass the New Jersey Senate last night.

The bill was opposed by a number of senators who termed the measure, in one lawmaker's words, "a subtle intimidation of the press."

Congressman Accused Of Prejudging Nixon

REP. JOHN CONYERS
Says mind is made up

DETROIT (UPI) — U.S. Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., should step down from the House Judiciary Committee or be removed because he has already made up his mind on the innocence or guilt of President Nixon, according to the deputy special assistant to the President.

Dr. John McLaughlin, a Jesuit Priest who last week left the sanctuary of his White House office to defend the President's profanity on the Watergate tapes, said if Conyers doeen't step down, he'll personally ask committee chairman Peter Rodino, D-N.J., to force him out.

McLalughlin cited published statements by Conyers which state that his "mind is made up on the innocence or guilt of President Nixon."

He said this was unfair to the President because all the evidence isn't in yet. The House Judiciary Committee is responsible for determining if Nixon should be put through the impeachment process.

McLaughlin said no one would allow Conyers to serve on a jury to hear evidence, yet he is on the House committee that must decide the fate of Nixon.

McLaughlin, speaking at the Wayne State Alumni Law Association dinner yesterday, praised Nixon for accomplishing more good than any other chief executive in the history of the country.

"I wear multiple habits," said McLaughlin. "I am preaching no gospel, except the gospel of Richard Nixon.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Oil Firms To Be Nationalized

CARACAS (UPI) — A high-level commission began working out details today for taking over all foreign oil companies after the government announced plans for the nationalization of Venezuela's petroleum industry.

Peres

President Carlos Andres Peres said last night the government had officially decided to nationalize American and other foreign oil firms in Venezuela, the world's third largest petroleum exporter.

"A new, historic opportunity has opened for Venezuela, Latin America and all the countries which are victims of the economic totalitarianism of the great developed nations," Perez said.

He said Venezuela's oil resources, which have been developed by major international firms such as Exxon, Shell, Gulf and Mobil, "will be, from today on and more than ever, our own history."

Stinson Beach Sewer Hearing Set

I-J Special Report

BERKELEY — A formal hearing on a request to force Stinson Beach to build a sewage system has been set June 19 by the Bay Area Sewage Services Agency.

The hearing will be at 7:30 p.m. here in the Hotel Claremont.

Agency directors voted unanimously Wednesday night to conduct the hearing, as recommended by the board's planning committee.

The board also called for amendment of pending legislation in Sacramento to extend the agency's power to build a collection system of sewers as well as a treatment system. The bill, AB 3860 by Assemblyman John T. Knox, D-Richmond, should be amended to make it an urgency measure, thus law as soon as it is signed by the governor. Without this provision, it could not be law until next January.

Finally, directors authorized the staff to hire engineering and financial consultants to look into the community's sewage problems. It currently relies entirely on septic tanks, some of which have failed and caused pollution to adjacent waters.

No one from the community or Stinson Beach County Water District was present. The request for the agency's intervention in the community was made by the Regional Water Quality Control Board in the wake of the community's rejection in March of a $2.5 million sewage system.

Defiant district officials, meeting last week with the agency's planning committee, insisted there is no way the community can be forced to build a system. (The main objection by opponents of the proposed system is that it would encourage excessive population growth.)

The agency has the power to build a sewage system and bill residents and property owners without their vote of approval. It never has used the power, however.

The agency's planning committee recommended the formal steps be started after pleading unsuccessfully with district directors to solve the problem themselves.

Island Is Donated For Lagoon Area

McKennan Island in the southern part of Bolinas Lagoon, has been donated to the county by Wilma Leonard of Stinson Beach.

Mrs. Leonard is the wife of former county planning commissioner George P. Leonard. County supervisors are expected to accept the 12-acre island on Tuesday, Supervisor Gary T. Giacomini said yesterday in announcing the gift.

He said an independent appraiser valued the island at about $50,000. It will become part of the county's Bolinas Lagoon Park.

The Leonard family has both given and sold land to the Mount Tamalpais State Park. It also donated an easement to the Dipsea Trail to insure the retention of the historic race.

Youth Booked On Gun Charge

A 17-year-old Novato youth has been booked at juvenile hall after he reportedly displayed a loaded gun at the Novato High School campus.

Novato police said the youth was arrested on suspicion of possession of a loaded firearm and possession of stolen property and loitering on school grounds at 12:25 p.m. Tuesday.

Officers said the youth was reported in the parking lot behind the girls gymnasium with a .38 caliber revoler, but when searched was unarmed. The gun was located later in the area where he had been standing, police said.

The gun had been reported stolen from the home of Mark L. Kinsey, 6 Romar Court, between Saturday and Monday, police said.

Stinson Beach Sewer Hearing Set

I-J Special Report

BERKELEY — A formal hearing on a request to force Stinson Beach to build a sewage system has been set June 19 by the Bay Area Sewage Services Agency.

The hearing will be at 7:30 p.m. here in the Hotel Claremont.

Harris has been identified as the "Teko" of the SLA who spoke on a tape recording received after the April 15 robbery of a San Francisco bank in which Miss Hearst participated.

Harris and his wife had been sweethearts at the University of Indiana where he was a speech major. In 1972, they moved to the West Coast and lived for a time in Berkeley, with Angela Atwood who is also a suspected SLA member.

It was the second close call for the SLA fugitives.

On May 2, the FBI broke into an apartment building in San Fraicisco 14 blocks from its headquarters and found evidence that members of the terrorist cult, including Patty, had been hiding there.

Street Sitter Struck By Car

A Sausalito woman who was sitting in the street last night suffered a broken pelvis and multiple cuts when she was struck by a passing car and dragged five feet, police reported.

Annie A. Arrow, 52, of 16 Crescent Avenue, was reported in satisfactory condition today at Marin General Hospital.

Driver of the car, Linda Jean Corzine, 25, of 408 Sausalito Boulevard, was booked into county jail on suspicion of drunken driving and released on her promise to appear next Friday in Marin Municipal Court.

Police said Mrs. Arrow was sitting in the westbound lane of Richardson Street in Sausalito at 11 p.m. when she was hit by the Corzine auto.

Staff Told To Rewrite Plan Work

The San Rafael Planning Commission, unhappy with the work of general plan consultants Duncan and Jones, last night rejected a rewrite of the Plant's housing element.

Instead, commissioners told city staff to do the job, saying that consultants merely "rehashed the original document" and did not heed commission instructions.

Commissioners said the revised housing element still included a proposal that the city provide more low and moderate income housing than is now available despite city instructions that such housing should not be increased significantly.

Planning Director Herbert G. Hotchner described the situation as frustrating, saying the consultants are trying "to push their own philosophy."

The rewrite also "talked about how to spend money" to provide moderate income housing, but not "how to get money," Hotchner said.

The consultants failed to provide revised neighborhood population statistics, as requested by the commission, according to Hotchner.

Hotchner said his staff will present a housing element to the commission at 8 p.m. June 11.

Tam Valley Raid Nets Trio, $40,000 In Dope

Marin County sheriff's deputies last night arrested three men in Tamalpais Valley and seized an estimated $40,000 worth of hashish.

Deputies reported that they found 18 pounds of hashish and a small amount of cocaine inside a car parked on West California Avenue with three men sitting inside.

Deputies were called to the area by a resident who reported seeing a suspicious car.

Gary Lee Rice, 20, of Sunnyvale, was booked into Marin County Jail on suspicion of possessing dangerous drugs and marijuana for sale. Thomas Allan Mathers, 21, of Los Altos, and Donald Carl Calundan, 18, of Sunnyvale, both were booked into jail on suspicion of possessing marijuana for sale.

Rice and Mathers were held in jail in lieu of $5,000 bail each and were to appear today in Marin Municipal Court. Calundan posted $5,000 bail and is to appear in court Tuesday.

The state Bureau of Narcotics Enforcement estimated the retail street value of the drugs found at $40,000 and the wholesale value at $15,000.

Marin Man Indicted In Loan Scheme

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — A 32-year-old San Rafael man and a man from Burlingame have been indicted by a federal grand jury for allegedly taking part in a fake loan scheme that defrauded a bank out of $280,000.

Raymond Louis Pariani of 27 Carroll Court, a former assistant manager for the California-Montgomery branch of Security Pacific National Bank, and Eugene Borelli of Burlingame, a San Francisco real estate broker, both are named in the 63-count indictment.

The men are charged with misapplying bank funds by making false loans and with causing false entries to be made in bank records.

Pariani also is charged with receiving payments for making the loans.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Paul Fitzpatrick of Fairfax said 25 false loans were made between Oct. 12, 1972 and July 6, 1973.

He said the San Rafael man allegedly would approve the loans for persons who did not exist and Borelli then would use the money in real estate investments. Borelli allegedly paid $28,500 to Pariani for approving the loans, Fitzpatrick said.

The assistant U.S. attorney said Borelli has agreed to pay back $220,000 and has paid about half that amount to the bank. Pariani has paid back $28,500.

He said a third party, who benefited from one of Borelli's real estate deals, but was not named in the indictment, has returned $60,000 to the bank.

House Hits Plea On Debt Ceiling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Ways and Means Committee once again has reduced the administration's request to raise the national debt ceiling, and a move is under way to cut it back even further on the House floor.

The committee yesterday approved a new $495 billion ceiling, which would be a $19.5 billion increase over the present ceiling of $475.5 billion. The ceiling approved by the committee would expire next March 31. The present ceiling expires June 30.

neling, he said.

The new pipes are needed to eliminate sewer pipes which dump raw sewage into local creeks during the rainy season, Ongaro said.

One businessman noted that labor contracts expire in June and warned that strikes might slow construction.

Burtleson said he doubted that. "The laborers and operating engineers haven't struck for more than 12 years," he said. Other groups, particularly cement masons, carpenters and teamsters could strike, he said, but they are not being used on this job.

Ross Valley Sanitary District officials pledged to keep local merchants abreast of the labor situation, and promised to fill boring pits if workers strike.

Protest Champ Backing Waldie

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Robert Simpson, veteran Capitol picketer, has thrown his political weight — slogans and all — behind Jerome Waldie for governor in the June 4 primary.

That move, of course, doesn't stop the 93-year-old protestor from still considering himself in the race also. But in the meantime, he told a news conference yesterday, he wants everyone to vote for Waldie.

After surveying all the 29 candidates in the race for governor, Simpson said, he concluded that Waldie, a Democratic congressman from Antioch, was his man because he has "courage and vision."

Segretti Loses Round In Court

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Political dirty trickster Donald H. Segretti lost a round with the California Supreme Court yesterday in his effort to stop disbarment proceedings.

The court denied without comment a petition in which Segretti asked that the state bar be prohibited from using his testimony before the Senate Watergate Committee.

Last year Segretti pleaded guilty to several misdemeanor charges and was granted immunity from further prosecution for his testimony before the Senate panel.

The San Rafael Planning Commission, unhappy with the work of general plan consultants Duncan and Jones, last night rejected a rewrite of the Plant's housing element.

Instead, commissioners told city staff to do the job, saying that consultants merely "rehashed the original document" and did not heed commission instructions.

Commissioners said the revised housing element still included a proposal that the city provide more low and moderate income housing than is now available despite city instructions that such housing should not be increased significantly.

Planning Director Herbert G. Hotchner described the situation as frustrating, saying the consultants are trying "to push their own philosophy."

The rewrite also "talked about how to spend money" to provide moderate income housing, but not "how to get money," Hotchner said.

The consultants failed to provide revised neighborhood population statistics, as requested by the commission, according to Hotchner.

Hotchner said his staff will present a housing element to the commission at 8 p.m. June 11.

Tam Valley Raid Nets Trio, $40,000 In Dope

Marin County sheriff's deputies last night arrested three men in Tamalpais Valley and seized an estimated $40,000 worth of hashish.

Deputies reported that they found 18 pounds of hashish and a small amount of cocaine inside a car parked on West California Avenue with three men sitting inside.

Deputies were called to the area by a resident who reported seeing a suspicious car.

Gary Lee Rice, 20, of Sunnyvale, was booked into Marin County Jail on suspicion of possessing dangerous drugs and marijuana for sale. Thomas Allan Mathers, 21, of Los Altos, and Donald Carl Calundan, 18, of Sunnyvale, both were booked into jail on suspicion of possessing marijuana for sale.

Rice and Mathers were held in jail in lieu of $5,000 bail each and were to appear today in Marin Municipal Court. Calundan posted $5,000 bail and is to appear in court Tuesday.

The state Bureau of Narcotics Enforcement estimated the retail street value of the drugs found at $40,000 and the wholesale value at $15,000.

Marin Man Indicted In Loan Scheme

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — A 32-year-old San Rafael man and a man from Burlingame have been indicted by a federal grand jury for allegedly taking part in a fake loan scheme that defrauded a bank out of $280,000.

Raymond Louis Pariani of 27 Carroll Court, a former assistant manager for the California-Montgomery branch of Security Pacific National Bank, and Eugene Borelli of Burlingame, a San Francisco real estate broker, both are named in the 63-count indictment.

The men are charged with misapplying bank funds by making false loans and with causing false entries to be made in bank records.

Pariani also is charged with receiving payments for making the loans.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Paul Fitzpatrick of Fairfax said 25 false loans were made between Oct. 12, 1972 and July 6, 1973.

He said the San Rafael man allegedly would approve the loans for persons who did not exist and Borelli then would use the money in real estate investments. Borelli allegedly paid $28,500 to Pariani for approving the loans, Fitzpatrick said.

The assistant U.S. attorney said Borelli has agreed to pay back $220,000 and has paid about half that amount to the bank. Pariani has paid back $28,500.

He said a third party, who benefited from one of Borelli's real estate deals, but was not named in the indictment, has returned $60,000 to the bank.

House Hits Plea On Debt Ceiling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Ways and Means Committee once again has reduced the administration's request to raise the national debt ceiling, and a move is under way to cut it back even further on the House floor.

The committee yesterday approved a new $495 billion ceiling, which would be a $19.5 billion increase over the present ceiling of $475.5 billion. The ceiling approved by the committee would expire next March 31. The present ceiling expires June 30.

neling, he said.

The new pipes are needed to eliminate sewer pipes which dump raw sewage into local creeks during the rainy season, Ongaro said.

One businessman noted that labor contracts expire in June and warned that strikes might slow construction.

Burtleson said he doubted that. "The laborers and operating engineers haven't struck for more than 12 years," he said. Other groups, particularly cement masons, carpenters and teamsters could strike, he said, but they are not being used on this job.

Ross Valley Sanitary District officials pledged to keep local merchants abreast of the labor situation, and promised to fill boring pits if workers strike.

Protest Champ Backing Waldie

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Robert Simpson, veteran Capitol picketer, has thrown his political weight — slogans and all — behind Jerome Waldie for governor in the June 4 primary.

That move, of course, doesn't stop the 93-year-old protestor from still considering himself in the race also. But in the meantime, he told a news conference yesterday, he wants everyone to vote for Waldie.

After surveying all the 29 candidates in the race for governor, Simpson said, he concluded that Waldie, a Democratic congressman from Antioch, was his man because he has "courage and vision."

Surge Of 'Bootleg' Land Sales Spurs Probe Pace

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — An upsurge in "bootleg" land offerings across California has prompted the state Department of Real Estate to double the number of its investigations in the past 10 months, Commissioner Robert H. Karpe said yesterday.

The department staff, including a special 12-man task force pressed into service last fall, has investigated 218 land offerings since July, more than twice the number for the same period in previous years, Karpe said.

The probes, he added, resulted in 33 desist and refrain orders, five cases being submitted to county district attorneys for criminal prosecution, and seven accusations against real estate licenses.

The desist and refrain orders have the effect of stopping sales and marketing programs until the subdivider has complied with local and state laws.

Most complaints and subsequent investigations, Karpe said in an interview, have been in the Antelope Valley, San Bernardino and Riverside counties and in the Sierra foothills.

Karpe defined "bootleg" land subdivisions as the "indiscriminate cutting up of parcels of land."

"It is the business of subdividing many parcels of land without first applying for the proper permits from the appropriate regulatory authorities. And of course there are many, many ways this can be done," he said.

The most prevalent practice is the setting up of dummy corporations to divide and then redivide the land, Karpe said.

Department investigations, he said, result from consumer complaints and investigators checking advertisements for land deals.

"We also work with county officials, get their records of sales and there can be a certain pattern of sales of many lots. We check out the ownership to see if there is a tie in between the owners," he added.

End To Oil Company Ownership Of Service Stations Proposed

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — To reduce gasoline prices, Attorney General Evelle Younger's Task Force on Energy has recommended that oil companies be required to divest themselves of their service stations.

The task force, established by Younger in January, yesterday called for legislation to eliminate oil company-owned stations, to place the oil pipeline system in California under control of the Public Utilities Commission and to abolish the 22 per cent oil depletion allowance.

A 33-page task force report said divesting of the companies' retail marketing outlets would "create competition. If all refineries were competing for the sale to retailers, presumably the price to retailers should be lowered.

"Further, without the price support previously provided by the majors (major companies) to their own retailers," the report said, "the lowest-priced retailer should be able to capture his fair share of the market."

The task force said that during the gasoline shortage it appears the major oil companies supplied their own stations with gasoline first, thus cutting the supply to independents.

New Claim Of Executive Privilege

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon invoked executive privilege on advice given him by his former cabinet member Maurice H. Stans regarding certain candidates for ambassadorships, a White House lawyer said today.

Nixon's latest claim of executive privilege was made public at a federal court hearing on Stans' refusal to surrender documents subpoenaed by a Watergate grand jury dealing with "possibly illegal activities" in Republican fund raising campaigns.

J. Fred Buzhardt, one of Nixon's lawyers, wrote Stans' attorney, Robert J. Barker Thursday saying that in four specific cases regarding ambassadorships the President would waive the privilege but would not in all over cases.

Barker handed the letter to U.S. District Judge George L. Hart saying it was "the position of the President" that the discussions between Stans, the finance chief of Nixon's reelection campaign, and Nixon should remain secret.

The grand jury is known to be investigating whether governmental favors were traded for contributions to Nixon's 1972 campaign. Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's former personal attorney, has pleaded guilty to promising an ambassadorship to a wealthy contributor.

Barker claimed many of the papers subpoeaned by special prosecutor Leon Jaworski don't exist. But the prosecutors began calling witnesses to the stand — including Stans' secretary, Arden Chambers—who testified that they had seen various documents listed in the subpoena.

Buzhardt's letter said that to assure that advice to the President is given in absolute candor, the confidentiality of the remarks "must be protected."

School Budget Is Reviewed

Sausalito School District trustees last night reviewed a proposed 1974-75 budget of $1,313,840, about $20,000 less than this year's spending program.

The budget would require no increase in the existing tax rate of $1.60 per $100 of assessed valuation, according to Supt. Donald W. Johnson.

Trustees will consider the budget proposal again June 17.

New Claim Of Executive Privilege

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon invoked executive privilege on advice given him by his former cabinet member Maurice H. Stans regarding certain candidates for ambassadorships, a White House lawyer said today.

Nixon's latest claim of executive privilege was made public at a federal court hearing on Stans' refusal to surrender documents subpoenaed by a Watergate grand jury dealing with "possibly illegal activities" in Republican fund raising campaigns.

J. Fred Buzhardt, one of Nixon's lawyers, wrote Stans' attorney, Robert J. Barker Thursday saying that in four specific cases regarding ambassadorships the President would waive the privilege but would not in all over cases.

Barker handed the letter to U.S. District Judge George L. Hart saying it was "the position of the President" that the discussions between Stans, the finance chief of Nixon's reelection campaign, and Nixon should remain secret.

The grand jury is known to be investigating whether governmental favors were traded for contributions to Nixon's 1972 campaign. Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's former personal attorney, has pleaded guilty to promising an ambassadorship to a wealthy contributor.

Clerk Candidate Levels Charges

Howard Hanson of Novato, candidate for Marin County clerk, has criticized three fellow candidates for the post, asserting their "current performance (in other county jobs) leaves room for improvement and savings."

Peter C. Meyer, county elections officer, heads a division "more expensive to operate per capita than eight similar size counties in the state," Hanson declared.

Hanson, administrator of the Marin County Superior Court, also charged that "inflated voter registration lists in Marin are costing the county an additional $10,200 annually" because they are used to set the state's share of judges' salaries.

"Sample ballots for the June 4 primary have been out in adjacent counties since May 7. They are not due to be mailed out until mid-May in Marin," Hanson said.

Turning to Asst. County Clerk John F. Musser Jr., Hanson said his administration "has resulted in stagnation, constant bickering among personnel and morale problems. Piecemeal attempts at modernization have been costly and ineffective," he said, adding "the lack of responsiveness to the public and the courts is not in the best interest of efficient government."

Hanson also criticized Junetta Younglove, the county's deputy jury commissioner. The present jury system costs $100,000 a year, he said, but the cost "can be reduced by $25,000 through analysis of usage of jurors for different types of cases as well as a more realistic assessment of the need for jurors on a weekly basis." Citing what he termed "unnecessary inconvenience to large numbers of citizens" under the current jury system, he said too many citizens are reluctant to register to vote for fear of being called to a jury panel.

Hanson also took a dig at County Administrator John F. Barrows, saying the county clerk "should regain control from the county administrator over the content and form of the agenda for the board of supervisors in order to insure public and departmental input in an unbiased and timely fashion."

If elected, Hanson promised he will "rekindle the idea that public employees are there to serve all the public, not just their acquaintances or those citizens with spheres of influence."

GOP — A fund-raising cocktail party will be held by the Marin Federated Republican Women at 4 p.m. Sunday at the San Anselmo home of Mrs. Alan Kittelman, 50 Park Way. All GOP candidates in the June primary have been invited.

SILVESTRI — George J. Silvestri Jr. of Novato, candidate for the Democratic nomination in the Ninth Assembly District, has proposed "literally bulldozing San Quentin Prison, that growing "graduate school of crime,"' and replacing it with smaller institutions.

SMITH — Coffees for Polly O. Smith of Tiburon, candidate for Marin Municipal Water District's Division 5 seat, will be at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at the Sausalito home of Lane P. Brennan, 86 Marin Avenue, and 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Belvedere home of Mrs. Leonard S. Rogers, 25 Belvedere Avenue.

BROCKBANK — A wine and cheese party for Elaine Brockbank of Kentfield, candidate for Tamalpais High School District trustee, will be at 8 p.m. Sunday at the Kentfield home of Mrs. William M. Connarn, 111 Crown Road.

KRUG — Edward M. Krug of San Rafael, candidate for Marin County district attorney, rebutting a charge by the incumbent, Bruce B. Bales, that Krug was exaggerating his professional experience, has said that during the past three and a half years as senior trial deputy district attorney in Sonoma County and two years in Mendocino County "I have tried the great bulk of the important and significant cases in those counties, including 31 homicide cases. This is quality experience," he said, adding he "would be surprised if the incumbent has tried as many as five cases in the last five years."

Bales's 20 years of experience "appears to be a negative rather than a positive factor," Krug said. Bales, he said, "has grown stale in office, and does not exhibit enthusiastic or imaginative leadership."

Coffess for Krug will be: 8:30 p.m. Monday at the Mill Valley home of Charles Sugarman, 12 Great Circle Drive; 8 p.m. next Friday at the Novato home of Richard Freedman, 19 Estado Court, and 7:30 p.m. May 28 at the Kentfield home of Harold Silen, 8 Buckeye Way.

CAYLOR — Thomas O. Caylor of San Francisco, candidate for the Republican nomination in the Fifth Congressional District and for election to the same seat for the remainder of this year, has opposed busing of school children to integrate schools. "About the only thing a child will learn on a bus is his way around town," he said. "I do not believe that school location or an arbitrary formula of racial and ethnic proportions determines whether a child receives a quality education," Caylor said. The money spent on busing instead should go to the schools themselves. "Quality schools should be brought to the students rather than the other way around," he said.

BURTON — Assemblyman John L. Burton, D-San Francisco, candidate for his party's nomination in the Fifth Congressional District and for election to the same seat for the remainder of this year, has been endorsed by the California Organization of Police and Sheriffs. The organization, which represents some 20,000 officers, said Burton's "support of legislation vital to the priorities of policemen, such as his stand on a police bill of rights and his authorship of a state bill which prohibits the mandatory use of lie detector tests against policemen, more than warrants our endorsement."

SMITH — Coffees for Dr. Darrell F. Smith of Kentfield, candidate for Tamalpais High School District trustee, will be: at noon Wednesday at the Larkspur home of Mrs. Rex Gardner, 75 Cornell Avenue; 8 p.m. Thursday at the Greenbrae home of Mrs. William J. Tognotti, 190 Corte Ramon, and 8 p.m. May 28 at the Tiburon home of Mrs. A. M. Rosenberg, 951 Tiburon Boulevard.

Giant Energy Bill To Reagan

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Landmark legislation aimed at providing more energy for Californians in the future while curbing wasteful power consumption reached Gov. Ronald Reagan's desk today after zipping through the Assembly.

The measure by Assemblyman Charles Warren, D-Los Angeles, will create a five-member state energy commission with broad powers to site nuclear plants and impose a $16 million-a-year tax increase on electricity users for energy-related research.

Touted as the most comprehensive energy legislation in the nation, the bill won final approval by the Assembly yesterday on a 59-8 vote to accept Senate amendments.

Reagan, who helped fashion the compromise measure, has indicated he will sign the bill. The governor approves of the bill primarily because of its power plant siting features "in view of the energy crisis and the threat of blackouts and brownouts in the future," a Reagan aide said.

The new commission, to be appointed in January by the next California governor, would have authority to ban power-gobbling home appliances and set strict standards for insulation of new homes and buildings.

Warren said the $16 million tax would add about 50 cents a year to the average home-owner's electricity bill. It will be used for research to make electrical products more efficient and curb wasteful energy uses.

Assembly opponents contended the measure would strip local governments of their zoning authority, result in new power plants being constructed in rural areas and grant "mighty broad powers" to the five non-elected commission members.

Currently, Warren noted, new nuclear power plants must be approved by a maze of 33 different governmental agancies. Under the bill, the new commission would be the only agency to approve power plants —except for the state Coastal Commission for coastline plants and the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for nuclear plants.

The bill is based on a Rand Corp. report which said California would need 120 new nuclear power plants by the year 2000 unless the state adopted a new ethic of energy conservation. The report estimated 40 per cent of power now expended in California was wasted.

The energy-saving provisions of the new bill, Warren said, will mean California should only need 35 new nuclear plants by 2000 and will trim the state's annual growth rate in energy consumption from the current 7.5 per cent to about 3 per cent.

Even with passage of the bill, he added, delays of power plant construction under the current system "will result in serious power shortages within the next 18 to 24 months."

Reagan vetoed a similar bill last year, but this year worked out a compromise with legislators and special interests such as utility companies and environmental groups.

Assemblyman Ray E. Johnson, R-Chico, complained the bill may result in power plants being sited in valuable farmlands because of the tendency "to always put the garbage dumps where the least votes are."

Assemblyman Robert Burke, R-Huntington Beach, contended the bill would strip local government of zoning powers and prevent former utility company employes from becoming commission members.

Former Milk Executive Fined For Illegal Gift

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A former Pennsylvania milk cooperative executive, his eyes filled with tears, pleaded guilty today to giving nonwillful illegal contributions to President Nixon's 1972 reelection campaign.

U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr. gave Richard L. Allison, 42, who has been fired as president of the Lehigh Valley Cooperative Farmers, a suspended fine of $1,000 and placed him on unsupervised probation for one month.

Allison's wife covered her face with her hands and wept as the sentence was pronounced. Outside the courthouse later, Allison said in a broken voice: "It's been a very horrible ordeal."

Lehigt Valley, an Allentown, Pa., based organization with 970 members, pleaded guilty 11 days ago to illegally contributing $50,000 to Nixon's campaign and Hart fined the co-op the maximum $5,000.

It is illegal for corporations to contribute to election campaigns.

The $50,000 had been given as an honorarium for Agriculture Serretary Earl Butz, Richard S. Stevens, Allison's lawyer said, "but we now understand it was going to the Committee to Re-elect the President."

Stegens said Allison has showed "reckless disregard" in not checking more closely on what the $50,000 was going to be used for.

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Landmark legislation aimed at providing more energy for Californians in the future while curbing wasteful power consumption reached Gov. Ronald Reagan's desk today after zipping through the Assembly.

The measure by Assemblyman Charles Warren, D-Los Angeles, will create a five-member state energy commission with broad powers to site nuclear plants and impose a $16 million-a-year tax increase on electricity users for energy-related research.

Touted as the most comprehensive energy legislation in the nation, the bill won final approval by the Assembly yesterday on a 59-8 vote to accept Senate amendments.

Reagan, who helped fashion the compromise measure, has indicated he will sign the bill. The governor approves of the bill primarily because of its power plant siting features "in view of the energy crisis and the threat of blackouts and brownouts in the future," a Reagan aide said.

The new commission, to be appointed in January by the next California governor, would have authority to ban power-gobbling home appliances and set strict standards for insulation of new homes and buildings.

Warren said the $16 million tax would add about 50 cents a year to the average homeowner's electricity bill. It will be used for research to make electrical products more efficient and curb wasteful energy uses.

Assembly opponents contended the measure would strip local governments of their zoning authority, result in new power plants being constructed in rural areas and grant "mighty broad powers" to the five non-elected commission members.

Currently, Warren noted, new nuclear power plants must be approved by a maze of 33 different governmental agancies. Under the bill, the new commission would be the only agency to approve power plants —except for the state Coastal Commission for coastline plants and the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for nuclear plants.

The bill is based on a Rand Corp. report which said California would need 120 new nuclear power plants by the year 2000 unless the state adopted a new ethic of energy conservation. The report estimated 40 per cent of power now expended in California was wasted.

The energy-saving provisions of the new bill, Warren said, will mean California should only need 35 new nuclear plants by 2000 and will trim the state's annual growth rate in energy consumption from the current 7.5 per cent to about 3 per cent.

Even with passage of the bill, he added, delays of power plant construction under the current system "will result in serious power shortages within the next 18 to 24 months."

Reagan vetoed a similar bill last year, but this year worked out a compromise with legislators and special interests such as utility companies and environmental groups.

Assemblyman Ray E. Johnson, R-Chico, complained the bill may result in power plants being sited in valuable farmlands because of the tendency "to always put the garbage dumps where the least votes are."

Assemblyman Robert Burke, R-Huntington Beach, contended the bill would strip local government of zoning powers and prevent former utility company employes from becoming commission members.

Former Milk Executive Fined For Illegal Gift

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A former Pennsylvania milk cooperative executive, his eyes filled with tears, pleaded guilty today to giving nonwillful illegal contributions to President Nixon's 1972 reelection campaign.

U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr. gave Richard L. Allison, 42, who has been fired as president of the Lehigh Valley Cooperative Farmers, a suspended fine of $1,000 and placed him on unsupervised probation for one month.

Allison's wife covered her face with her hands and wept as the sentence was pronounced. Outside the courthouse later, Allison said in a broken voice: "It's been a very horrible ordeal."

Lehigt Valley, an Allentown, Pa., based organization with 970 members, pleaded guilty 11 days ago to illegally contributing $50,000 to Nixon's campaign and Hart fined the co-op the maximum $5,000.

It is illegal for corporations to contribute to election campaigns.

The $50,000 had been given as an honorarium for Agriculture Serretary Earl Butz, Richard S. Stevens, Allison's lawyer said, "but we now understand it was going to the Committee to Re-elect the President."

Stegens said Allison has showed "reckless disregard" in not checking more closely on what the $50,000 was going to be used for.

One Dead And Seven Hurt In San Quentin Violence

Three bloody outbreaks at San Quentin yesterday left one convict dead, six stabbed and one seriously injured by a fall.

Warden Louis S. Nelson ordered most of the prison's 3,359 inmates locked in their cells in the wake of the violence.

The dead man is Lewis W. Brown III, 25 who was stabbed 14 times while exercising in the upper yard. Although five guards ran to his rescue, he was pronounced dead at the prison hospital.

William Nyberg, San Quentin information officer, said the fatal attack apparently resulted from a continuing feud between Brown and his assailant. Nyberg refused to identify the attacker, but said a prison-made knife was taken from the man.

He is being held pending charges to be brought by the Marin County district attorney or grand jury, according to Nyberg, who said Brown and the man had fought previously when their trails crossed in two other state prisons.

Brown was serving time for auto theft in Alameda County.

Brown's body was taken to Daphne's mortuary in Corte Madera where the funeral was pending today. He is survived by his father, Lewis Wallace Brown Jr. of Oakland.

An hour after Brown's death, 13 inmates in the maximum security adjustment center got into a stabbing battle while exercising. Guards fired a rifle shot and two bursts of machine gun fire to break it up, but five inmates suffered stab wounds.

Nyberg said four convicts were treated and released, but Ricardo Resendez, 20, of Los Angeles, was still hospitalized in fair condition today. He is serving two concurrent three-to-life terms for sex perversion with force and possession of a weapon in prison.

The violence shifted to the high-rise East Block after the dinner hour. At 5:45 p.m., convict James I. Martin, 25, of San Diego, was stabbed in the shoulder and neck, on the third tier. At the same time, Ellis L. Davis, 23, of Los Angeles, fell or was pushed from the tier above, plunging almost 50 feet to the ground floor.

Martin was reported in good condition in the prison hospital; doctors were determining Davis's injuries. Nyberg said he may have suffered a skull fracture or a broken back.

Martin is serving six months to life for assault with a deadly weapon. Nyberg said his attacker has not been found.

Davis is serving six months to life for battery on a police officer.

Yesterday's killing was the third inmate slaying in the prison since April 3. The stabbings followed two other slashings on Wednesday, Nyberg noted.

He said that the lockdown will keep almost 3,000 prisoners in their cells indefinitely; only the honor block and C Section inmates will continue to work on essential prison jobs in the hospital, dining halls and the like.

New Incinerator Is Demonstrated

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — Imagine burning an old tire and using the heat from the fire to boil shrimp for hors d'oeurves.

A Milwaukee company did just that yesterday, but avoided the smoky stench in a demonstration of a non-polluting heat recovering incinerator that could "usher in a whole new energy source."

The incinerator, demonstrated at a waste disposal seminar, would allow plant managers to burn trash, capture the heat and re-cycle it for beneficial use.

Full-scale development of the device could produce 10 per cent of the total energy produced by U.S. consumption of heating oil, the company

Women Accuse Greyhound Of Sexual Discrimination

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — Two women bus drivers who live in Marin yesterday filed suit in federal court charging Greyhound Lines with sex discrimination in hiring.

Jill L. Mueller, of San Rafael, driver for the Golden Gate Transit District, and Helen C. Smith of Greenbrae, driver for the Marin Country Day School and a substitute driver for the San Rafael School District, said they were refused jobs by the company.

The women filed suit against Greyhound Lines-West of San Francisco, which operates buses in 26 western states, on their own behalf and for all women.

They said the bus firm employs 3,900 bus drivers, all of whom are male. The suit alleges that Greyhound discriminates against women by attempting to discourage them from applying for jobs and by different hiring procedures for men and women.

If women do get jobs, the suit charges, they are limited to certain kinds of positions.

In addition, Mrs. Smith said the company's minimum height requirement of 5 feet, 7 inches discriminates against women since statistics show that more than 80 per cent of American women are under that height.

She herself is 5 feet 3 inches and weighs 115 pounds, she said.

Mrs. Mueller said that after she had taken a job with Golden Gate Transit District, she was offered a job by Greyhound and told she would be the first woman driver hired by the company.

She said when she turned down the job because she was already employed, Greyhound asked that she withdraw a complaint she had filed with the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission. She said she did not believe Greyhound's offer of employment was made in good faith.

Women Accuse Greyhound Of Sexual Discrimination

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — Two women bus drivers who live in Marin yesterday filed suit in federal court charging Greyhound Lines with sex discrimination in hiring.

Jill L. Mueller, of San Rafael, driver for the Golden Gate Transit District, and Helen C. Smith of Greenbrae, driver for the Marin Country Day School and a substitute driver for the San Rafael School District, said they were refused jobs by the company.

The women filed suit against Greyhound Lines-West of San Francisco, which operates buses in 26 western states, on their own behalf and for all women.

They said the bus firm employs 3,900 bus drivers, all of whom are male. The suit alleges that Greyhound discriminates against women by attempting to discourage them from applying for jobs and by different hiring procedures for men and women.

If women do get jobs, the suit charges, they are limited to certain kinds of positions.

In addition, Mrs. Smith said the company's minimum height requirement of 5 feet, 7 inches discriminates against women since statistics show that more than 80 per cent of American women are under that height.

She herself is 5 feet 3 inches and weighs 115 pounds, she said.

Mrs. Mueller said that after she had taken a job with Golden Gate Transit District, she was offered a job by Greyhound and told she would be the first woman driver hired by the company.

She said when she turned down the job because she was already employed, Greyhound asked that she withdraw a complaint she had filed with the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission. She said she did not believe Greyhound's offer of employment was made in good faith.

Judge Denies Magee Trial Transfer Plea

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A federal judge yesterday denied a petition filed by Ruchel Magee, a survivor of the 1970 Marin County Hall of Justice shootout which left four dead, to have his murder trial moved here from the San Francisco Bay Area.

U.S. District Court Judge Harry Pregerson ruled Magee failed to prove that his civil rights would be violated by being tried in Santa Clara County.

The petition asked for a trial in U.S. District Court.

Magee, charged with aggravated kidnap in the shootout, pleaded guilty last Friday, but then changed his plea to innocent on Monday.

His case was originally transferred to San Jose from San Rafael, in Marin County, on a change of venue motion.

Assessor Must Appear In Court

REDDING (UPI) — Shasta County Assessor Robert McMillen has been ordered to appear in superior court next Wednesday to answer grand jury accusations of misconduct in office.

Superior Court Judge Clyde Small issued the order to McMillen yesterday. Earlier this week, the 3rd District Court of Appeal denied a writ that would have prevented the case from being heard in Shasta County courts.

McMillen contends the grand jury accusations of last January, charging willful and wrongful misconduct, are without foundation.

$82 Million In Taxes Collected

Some $82 million in property tax revenues have been collected this fiscal year and about $2.5 million remain delinquent, the Marin County Treasurer-Tax Collector said yesterday.

Treasurer-Tax Collector Stanley J. Fontez said the owners of 4,744 parcels have failed to pay. There are about 81,000 parcels in the county.

He said the delinquency rate is lower than last year's when about $80.8 million was collected and $3 million was left on the books.

Late payment penalties this fiscal year total $250,000 of which $53,000 has been collected, Fontez said.

Tax revenues are divided among school districts, cities, special districts and the county on the basis of assessed valuation and tax rate.

NO PLACE TO GO, BUT WAIT

Would-be passengers stand at a bus stop in Chicago's Loop and wait for the bus that wasn't coming shortly after the start of a Chicago Transit Authority strike early today. The CTA and the 11,000 member Amalgamated Transit Union reached a tentative agreement, ending the first complete transit shutdown in Chicago just two-and-one-half hours after the strike was called. Primary contract dispute centered around a cost-of-living clause.

Helicopter Prankster Wins Release

FORT MEADE, Md. (UPI) — An army mechanic charged with stealing a helicopter and crash landing it on the south lawn of the White House has been ordered released from custody upon request by his counsel.

Col. Kenneth Howard, chief of the U.S. Army Judiciary, yesterday ordered the Army to release Pfc. Robert K. Preston to his lawyers if they "accept the resposibility for his safety."

No restriction was placed on either the length of time outside the stockade nor the distance Preston could travel while in the custody of his attorneys. Howard did not setbail.

Preston, 20, of Panama City, Fla., is accused of commandeering the chopper at Ft. George Meade, about midway between Baltimore and Washington last Feb. 17.

Authorities said Preston led police on a wild chase down the Baltimore-Washington Parkway which ended when he allegedly put the craft down at the White House amid volleys of Secret Service shotgun blasts.

President Nixon and the first family were away at the time.

Howard warned that if the Army balked at releasing Preston, "I have it in my power to dismiss these charges."

Though such a ruling can set no legal precedent, it was believed to be one of the few times in military judicial history that a judge ordered the release of a prisoner contrary to the service's policy of pretrial detention.

Joint Bid On Auburn Dam

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The low $61.8 million bid for the first phase of construction of the controversial Auburn Dam project was submitted by a joint venture of three firms, federal officials said today.

The offer came from the Gordon F. Ball Corp. of Danville, Guy Atkinson Corporation of South San Francisco and Arundel Corporation of Baltimore, Md., U.S. Bureau of Reclamation staff said.

Bureau officials said yesterday they expected to formally award the contract by June 1.

Ways Eyed To Save Satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — A new type weather satellite was launched today into a lower-than-normal orbit but space agency officials hoped to save the $23.6 million mission with some fancy rocket maneuvering.

The satellite was designed to go into an orbit 22,300 miles high so it would match earth's rotation and remain over one area of earth to monitor weather around the clork.

The spacecraft, called a Synchronous Meteorological Satellite (SMS), was launched at 5:31 a.m. EDT atop a three-stage Delta rocket, but the rocket's second stage did not fire as long as planned. This left the satellite in an elliptical orbit with a peak altitude 2,182 miles lower than planned.

The satellite carries a rocket motor intended to push the craft into its planned orbit. Before it is fired tonight, a spokesman at the NASA control center at Greenbelt, Md., said some of six small control rockets aboard SMS would be fired to attempt to make up the lost altitude.

Maheu Tells Of Breaking Up Hughes Aide, Nixon's Brother

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Robert A. Maheu testified yesterday that he ended John T. Meier's close business relationship with F. Donald Nixon at the White House' request.

Testifying in his $17.5 million libel suit against Howard Hughes' Summa Corp., Maheu testified the White House request came in 1969 from President Nixon's close friend, C. G. (Bebe) Rebozo. It was made to Richard Danner, who had just become a Hughes hotel executive in Las Vegas.

"Over a period of several months," Maheu told a federal court jury, "we had been requested by the White House to break up what they called a 'romance' between Mr. Meier and Mr. Donald Nixon."

Maheu said Rebozo told Danner that Meier and the President's brother had traveled extensively together, "one representing Hughes and the other with the name of the President."

He said Rebozo asked Danner for the cooperation of the Hughes organization in halting the relationship.

A former scientific adviser to the Hughes organization, Meier actually was carried on the payroll of Robert Maheu Associates rather than the Hughes company to avoid possible embarrassment to Hughes, Maheu said.

Maheu testified that Meier was hired to aid a program designed to stop the underground nuclear testing in Nevada.

"Mr. Hughes related that leftwing, stop-the-bomb groups would be utilized in the program and recommended that Mr. Meier be kept on the Robert A. Maheu Associates payroll," Maheu said.

Poll Results Show Lack Of Interest In One Race

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The California Poll reported today that the two major Democratic candidates for attorney general are running dead even while State Sen. H.L. Richardson is far ahead in the race for the GOP nomination to the U.S. Senate.

But the poll said the majority of voters have yet to form an opinion about either race.

Pollster Mervin D. Field noted that less than one voter in 10 was able to voice an opinion about either race until the names of the candidates were read to him.

Attorneys Vincent Bugliosi and William Morris each had 24 per cent in their race for the Democratic attorney general nomination. Other candidates had 1 per cent while 51 per cent were undecided.

Richardson drew 31 per cent among GOP voters for his U.S. Senate bid to 5 per cent for Dr. Earl Brian, former state health and welfare directors. Other candidates drew 7 per cent support while 57 per cent were undecided.

Silent SLA Friends Are Jailed

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Two friends of a fugitive member of the terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army were sent to jail yesterday for refusing to answer grand jury questions in the Patricia Hearst kidnaping.

Paul Halverson, 29, and Cynthia Garvey, 26, faced a possible 34 months in jail for refusing to answer 13 questions related to their acquaintance with SLA member Camilia Hall, one of the suspected Hearst kidnapers.

The federal grand jury was convened after the SLA staged a $10,000 bank robbery in which Miss Hearst appeared to take part. Miss Hall also was identified as a participant in pictures taken by the bank's automatic cameras.

Miss Garvey charged the grand jury was a political body and Halverson said his refusal to testify was a matter of conscience.

"I don't look on the grand jury as a legal institution," Miss Garvey told U.S. District Judge Alfonso J. Zirpoli, who sent them both to jail. "It squashes people whose politics are opposed to the government, and I will not cooperate with the grand jury."

Miss Garvey arrived in court with a toothbrush in her pocket, apparently anticipating the jail sentence which could last up to 34 months. They will remain jailed as long as the jury is convened, or until they answer the questions.

The questions were not disclosed but it was believed they centered on the pair's acquaintance with Miss Hall.

Their refusal was another frustration in efforts to crack the kidnap case, which FBI officials admit has them "stumped." Miss Hearst was kidnaped Feb. 4 and later said in a tape recording she had joined her band of captors, though her family believes she has been brainwashed or acted under coercion.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — James Earl Ray's attorney hopes the U.S. Supreme Court will decide by July whether the confessed assassin of Martin Luther King Jr. will get a hearing that could lead to a new trial.

Judge Dismisses Count Against Florida Senator

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (UPI) — An indictment charging Senate Watergate committee member Edward Gurney of Florida with violating a state election law was dismissed today by County Judge Charles McClure.

Saying the Republican senator does not have to stand trial, McClure said the indictment was "so vague and indefinite that it misled the defendant in the preparation of his defense."

He also declared unconstitutional the state law under which the misdemeanor count was brought.

Gurney, who labeled the charge a "politial Pearl Harbor attack" by Democrats hoping to win his seat in this year's elections, was not here for the announcement in open court. His attorney, C. Harris Dittmar of Jacksonville, was on hand.

McClure did not mention by name State Rep. Marshall Harris, D-Miami, who brought the complaint to the grand jury.

But he said that "an unqualified person testified before the grand jury on legal matters in violation of state statutes."

McClure was given access to the secret grand jury proceeding at which Harris, State Elections Supervisor Dorothy Glisson and State Attorney Harry Morrison and his staff were the oly witnesses and advisors.

McClure said that although by law only the state attorney and presiding judge can give advice to a grand jury, an unnamed witness, obviously Harris, "tendered legal advice, conclusions of law testified on legislative intent."

McClure called this "highly improper and prejudicial."

Dismissal came on the technical grounds that the statue was fatally defective in that the title failed to contain sufficient subject matter to meet the standard set by the state constitution.

Harris, a close friend and supporter of Sen. Richard Pettigrew, a Miami Democrat running for Gurney's seat, took the matter to the state attorney after watching a one-hour videotape of a news conference in which he said Gurney admitted accepting $100,000 in contributions without designating a campaign treasurer and depository as required of candidates in Florida.

Harris, an attorney and selfproclaimed "government snoop," said he went to Morrison because it was his "civic duty" and politics had nothing

CREATIVE ART

Gallery Showing Children's Work

By KAREN PETERSON

First and second grade teacher Joseph Vernaci wants to make it known that children's art has been neglected and sometimes stifled by "conventional" teaching.

So since September the 6 and 7-year-olds at Kenwood School, north of Sonoma, have been creating art "through their own mind," said the 25-year-old Vernaci.

A sampling of their work is on display through tomorrow at Nana's Gallery in Petaluma. The exhibit includes drawings, poems and a handsewn quilt by the 30 "Crayola Kids" (a name they chose for themselves.)

The quilt, which will be entered in this year's Sonoma County Fair, is their impressions of a house, said Vernaci.

"IT WAS a beautiful experience," he said of the months of sewing. The individual panels were embroidered with the students names and sewn together by the mothers of the youngsters.

The quilt, said Vernaci, helped teach the children finger coordination, and it also gave the boys a chance to learn sewing skills.

"The boys got into it. We had a sewing table and even the boys would come in and sew for their teddy bears. It wasn't a chauvinistic thing at all. You can show boys and girls equality," said Vernaci, a graduate of Sonoma State College.

Art trains the eye to see, said Vernaci, and it helps with every other skill. "I bring an object in, we spend five minutes looking at it and discussing it — it teaches them shapes, dimension, depth — like geometry."

"The conventional way of teaching stifles" creativity, believes Vernaci. "It doesn't give them the opportunity to use their minds."

Art, he continued, "trains the eyes to see, the senses to feel, the mind to think. When they learn (this). . . they will teach themselves."

Through art "you can appreciate all of life. (It gives) "more depth to the inner being," he said.

"I'M VERY expressive with the kid's feelings. We've spent a year on feelings — what makes you happy, sad, et cetera," said Vernaci, "And what colors make you feel good or bad."

Vernaci also encourages his students to put their feelings down on paper. "Even the slowest kid writes sentences today. I've seen the confidence it's given. No one was put down and everyone has improved."

"If you give kids an inch, they'll take a mile intelligence-wise," said Vernaci.

The gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday at the Lan Mart Shops, Petaluma Boulevard South.

EACH OF THE 30 handsewn panels in this quilt is a representation of home for the 6 and 7-year-old students at Sonoma County's Kenwood School. The quilt and other artwork by the "Crayola Kids" in Joseph Vernaci's first and second grade classes is on display through tomorrow at a Petaluma art gallery.

Couple Plans Wedding June 30 In Nicasio

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hughes of San Rafael have announced the engagement of their daughter Suzanne Hughes to Carl Christopher III of Greenbrae.

The couple is planning a June 29 wedding at Our Lady of Loretto Catholic Church in Nicasio.

Suzanne, who is a graduate of San Rafael High School, is the sister of Lori, Terry and Shari Hughes of San Rafael. She is employed by Gay's Doggie Salon in San Rafael.

Kip, as the future bridegroom is known, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Christopher Jr. of Greenbrae and the grandson of Mrs. Carl Christopher of Chelan, Wash.

He is a Redwood High School graduate and is employed by Millbrae Bowl in San Rafael.

Puppet Show Set At Park School

"Jasper and the Blue Flower", a production of the puppeteers of the Morning Glory Theater, will be presented May 25 at 2 p.m. at the Park School in Mill Valley under the auspices of the school's Parent-Teacher Association.

The professional puppeteers will present the public performance. Theme for the show is the myth of Jasper, a servant of Dr. Faustus, whose antics have made him a myth hero for European children.

The puppets are large, and the sound is amplified to enable even young children to follow the action, according to Anne Layzer, P-TA president.

Cut Rug Wear

Use a rug cushion to fill in uneven spaces in the floor and help prevent worn spots. A cushion also adds softness and absorbs noise besides extending the life of pile floor coverings.

College Program Will Focus On Women In Transition

The woman who is not content with the role of housewife and mother . . .

The woman who is seeking a way to find greater stimulation . . .

The woman in a relatively dead end job . . .

The woman who wants to upgrade her skills and employment potential . . .

These are the women in transition, the focus of the Women's Re-Entry Program to be implemented over the next three years at the College of Marin and Indian Valley Colleges, according to Earlene Jones, director of public information for the colleges.

The program is financed through a $12,000 federal grant and coordinated by Indian Valley Colleges administrative intern Diane Wickstrom. She and a task force of community research assistants are meeting with women throughout Marin to talk about their needs, changing life's goals and how their needs can be met through further college study.

The task force includes Anne Freidlander, Joan Sweeney and Joan Dow Sweeney of Novato; Arlene B. Konkoff of Tiburon; Adrianne Weiss of San Anselmo; Mattie Lee Knighten, Mary Estrada and Inez D'Arcy Heckman of San Rafael; Jeanne Serman and Betsy Holmes of Mill Valley; and Barbara Zeavin of Fairfax.

They will work through June assessing the needs of women in every community, and out of the needs assessment will come the planning of comprehensive programs, such as short courses, special counseling sessions, career planning workshops and other services that best meet the needs of women in Marin, according to Miss Wickstrom.

Of special concern are the women whose education, training and employment opportunities are distinctly inferior to those of men, yet whose responsibilities to herself, her family and her community are as great, Miss Wickstrom said.

According to College of Marin statistics, the mean family income in Marin is $16,136 per year. In families headed by women, the income is less than half that amount, $7,713.

Miss Wickstrom said she believes getting more education is the best path for a woman to follow if she wants to get more of the fruits of culture for herself and her family.

Women in Marin who are interested in returning to college should call the Office of Women's Re-entry Services at College of Marin if they have questions regarding child care, transportation, academic programs, special services or other barriers, which would prohibit their attending college, Miss Wickstrom said.

CREATIVE ART

Gallery Showing Children's Work

By KAREN PETERSON

First and second grade teacher Joseph Vernaci wants to make it known that children's art has been neglected and sometimes stifled by "conventional" teaching.

So since September the 6 and 7-year-olds at Kenwood School, north of Sonoma, have been creating art "through their own mind," said the 25-year-old Vernaci.

A sampling of their work is on display through tomorrow at Nana's Gallery in Petaluma. The exhibit includes drawings, poems and a handsewn quilt by the 30 "Crayola Kids" (a name they chose for themselves.)

The quilt, which will be entered in this year's Sonoma County Fair, is their impressions of a house, said Vernaci.

"IT WAS a beautiful experience," he said of the months of sewing. The individual panels were embroidered with the students names and sewn together by the mothers of the youngsters.

The quilt, said Vernaci, helped teach the children finger coordination, and it also gave the boys a chance to learn sewing skills.

"The boys got into it. We had a sewing table and even the boys would come in and sew for their teddy bears. It wasn't a chauvinistic thing at all. You can show boys and girls equality," said Vernaci, a graduate of Sonoma State College.

Art trains the eye to see, said Vernaci, and it helps with every other skill. "I bring an object in, we spend five minutes looking at it and discussing it — it teaches them shapes, dimension, depth — like geometry."

"The conventional way of teaching stifles" creativity, believes Vernaci. "It doesn't give them the opportunity to use their minds."

Art, he continued, "trains the eyes to see, the senses to feel, the mind to think. When they learn (this)... they will teach themselves."

Through art "you can appreciate all of life. (It gives) "more depth to the inner being," he said.

"I'M VERY expressive with the kid's feelings. We've spent a year on feelings — what makes you happy, sad, et cetera," said Vernaci, "And what colors make you feel good or bad."

Vernaci also encourages his students to put their feelings down on paper. "Even the slowest kid writes sentences today. I've seen the confidence it's given. No one was put down and everyone has improved."

"If you give kids an inch, they'll take a mile intelligence-wise," said Vernaci.

The gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday at the Lan Mart Shops, Petaluma Boulevard South.

EACH OF THE 30 handsewn panels in this quilt is a representation of home for the 6 and 7-year-old students at Sonoma County's Kenwood School. The quilt and other artwork by the "Crayola Kids" in Joseph Vernaci's first and second grade classes is on display through tomorrow at a Petaluma art gallery.

Couple Plans Wedding June 30 In Nicasio

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hughes of San Rafael have announced the engagement of their daughter Suzanne Hughes to Carl Christopher III of Greenbrae.

The couple is planning a June 29 wedding at Our Lady of Loretto Catholic Church in Nicasio.

Suzanne, who is a graduate of San Rafael High School, is the sister of Lori, Terry and Shari Hughes of San Rafael. She is employed by Gay's Doggie Salon in San Rafael.

Kip, as the future bridegroom is known, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Christopher Jr. of Greenbrae and the grandson of Mrs. Carl Christopher of Chelan, Wash.

He is a Redwood High School graduate and is employed by Millbrae Bowl in San Rafael.

Puppet Show Set At Park School

"Jasper and the Blue Flower", a production of the puppeteers of the Morning Glory Theater, will be presented May 25 at 2 p.m. at the Park School in Mill Valley under the auspices of the school's Parent-Teacher Association.

The professional puppeteers will present the public performance. Theme for the show is the myth of Jasper, a servant of Dr. Faustus, whose antics have made him a myth hero for European children.

The puppets are large, and the sound is amplified to enable even young children to follow the action, according to Anne Layzer, P-TA president.

Cut Rug Wear

Use a rug cushion to fill in uneven spaces in the floor and help prevent worn spots. A cushion also adds softness and absorbs noise besides extending the life of pile floor coverings.

College Program Will Focus On Women In Transition

The woman who is not content with the role of housewife and mother . . .

The woman who is seeking a way to find greater stimulation . . .

The woman in a relatively dead end job . . .

The woman who wants to upgrade her skills and employment potential . . .

These are the women in transition, the focus of the Women's Re-Entry Program to be implemented over the next three years at the College of Marin and Indian Valley Colleges, according to Earlene Jones, director of public information for the colleges.

The program is financed through a $12,000 federal grant and coordinated by Indian Valley Colleges administrative intern Diane Wickstrom. She and a task force of community research assistants are meeting with women throughout Marin to talk about their needs, changing life's goals and how their needs can be met through further college study.

The task force includes Anne Freidlander, Joan Sweeney and Joan Dow Sweeney of Novato; Arlene B. Konkoff of Tiburon; Adrianne Weiss of San Anselmo; Mattie Lee Knighten, Mary Estrada and Inez D'Arcy Heckman of San Rafael; Jeanne Serman and Betsy Holmes of Mill Valley; and Barbara Zeavin of Fairfax.

They will work through June assessing the needs of women in every community, and out of the needs assessment will come the planning of comprehensive programs, such as short courses, special counseling sessions, career planning workshops and other services that best meet the needs of women in Marin, according to Miss Wickstrom.

Of special concern are the women whose education, training and employment opportunities are distinctly inferior to those of men, yet whose responsibilities to herself, her family and her community are as great, Miss Wickstrom said.

According to College of Marin statistics, the mean family income in Marin is $16,136 per year. In families headed by women, the income is less than half that amount, $7,713.

Miss Wickstrom said she believes getting more education is the best path for a woman to follow if she wants to get more of the fruits of culture for herself and her family.

Women in Marin who are interested in returning to college should call the Office of Women's Re-entry Services at College of Marin if they have questions regarding child care, transportation, academic programs, special services or other barriers, which would prohibit their attending college, Miss Wickstrom said.

The Only Problem With This Father Is His Kids Come Last

DEAR HELEN:

I am the proud mother of three beautiful and fantastically wonderful children, ages 13, 11 and 7.

They have a bright and very able father (we're divorced) who is an active Scoutmaster, Little Leaguer, Midget Football coach, churchgoer. The only problem is, he forgets to include his own children, and always has. To society, he is an exceptional man, while his own children suffer.

Some examples:

His young son broke an ankle over a week ago. Father has never made one call, much less a visit. Meanwhile, one of his Little Leaguers with a broken leg is showered with gifts and visits from this "perfect man." These two boys are good friends. Imagine how it seems to my son when the other boy tells about the kindnesses his father has never offered him.

How do you mend a broken heart when your daughter hears her father tell another little girl how cute she is, while he refuses to let his own daughter sit on his lap?

I've learned to fish, camp, play ball, build tree houses, make doll clothes, as well as nurse our children through illnesses, while their father rides on a glory of Mr. Good.

The Bible teaches forgiveness. But how can I teach the children to forgive a man who hurts them so? — DESPERATE MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER:

Why not instead teach your children to accept what they can't change, and stop filling their lives with resentment — as you apparently do?

If they can't have a regular father, the next best thing is to learn they can function very well without him. — H.

P.S. On the other hand, are you quite sure part of the problem doesn't lie with you? Read on:-

DEAR HELEN:

I love my children, but I can't compete with my wife's possessiveness. Whatever I tried with them, she vetoed. On the few times she'd allow me to take one of them somewhere, I'd be blamed for his "catching a cold," or otherwise endangered. When we'd go places as a family, I got the criticism for suggesting "crazy risks." Her idea of a big event is to let the kids camp out in the back yard, with her sleeping nearby to "protect" them.

Well, finally, I stopped trying. Since she wants to be their only parent, and since she badmouths my efforts and influences the children away from me, I decided to give in to her wishes.

Now, Helen, she tells everyone I'm an unnatural father who doesn't care for his kids. This was one of her reasons for the divorce.

She accuses me of caring more for the children of the woman I am presently seeing, but it isn't a matter of love — it's just that they accept me, where before I was — SHUT OUT

P.S. Should I carry out the farce of visiting rights when all I get is distrust and antagonism?

DAR S.O.:

You might break down that wall of distrust if your children could visit with you outside their home. It won't be easy to reverse years of brainwashing, but at least you can try. — H.

P.S. to readers: These two letters came from different parts of the country. But somehow they belong together, don't you agree?

DEAR HELEN:

I know how "Turned Off" feels, for I too can't stand my husband's smoke: the stale tobacco air everywhere, burn holes, my children's inhaling all this harmful smoke, not to mention what it does to me.

My husband was warned by the doctor that he must give up cigarettes, but he uses everything that displeases or upsets him as an excuse to light up.

I wish I could be so lucky as to have separate bedrooms. It's hard to feel love for someone who cares so little about others. — BREATHLESS

Got a problem? An adult subject for discussion? You can talk it over in her column if you write to Helen Bottel, c/o the Independent-Journal, PO Box 330, 1040 B St., San Rafael, Ca. 94902.

'The Swingle' May Be Just An Image

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The image of the swinging single woman, the "swingle," may be just that — an image.

"Reality points to a varied picture: today's unmarried woman definitely cannot be typecast, which is particularly true if where-to-live preferences are any indication."

So reports Robert W. Gaber, president and chief executive officer of a mortgage company headquartered here.

Gaber notes that many single women are economic-security conscious but, rather than searching for a high-salaried male to support them through life, they seek stability on their own — through their careers, friendships and choice of residence.

"THE TREND is reflected currently in burgeoning numbers of single women today renting apartments in older neighborhoods.

"Instead of automatically opting for the 'swingles complex,' women carefully consider a number of factors before signing leases," he notes.

Gaber lists some of the attributes of older apartment buildings often cited by single women:

Diversity in renters' ages and backgrounds. Numerous unmarried women view rentals in older buildings as an opportunity to associate with a wide mix of people — not solely those of their age or marital status.

"Frequently, younger singles say they appreciate having older persons near to counsel them — to give them guidance and stability," Gaber observes.

Privacy. Women renters point out that there is little pressure to socialize with neighbors in recycled apartment houses — "It's a matter of individual preference, not management policy," one explains.

The charm, character and tradition accompanying an older dwelling and neighborhood have special appeal to certain prospective renters.

"Ultimately, the selection of an apartment —or condominium — is a highly personal decision. What is one woman's dream dwelling is another's nightmare," Gaber added.

"SOME SINGLE women simply prefer the yesteryear charm of an older building to a new or modern structure," Gaber said.

Locale. Renters — increasingly energy-conscious — are turning to renovated apartments close to town in order to eliminate or reduce commuting.

"Further, women who work long hours often choose to reside near their employment so that when their job day is over, they can be home in 5 or 10 minutes," Gaber says.

He stressed that this recent pattern by no means precludes the continued development of single-oriented apartment complexes.

"Today, there are about 975,000 more single, divorced and widowed women than in 1970. The sheer growth in the ranks of these unmarrieds means that both housing concepts can survive —and thrive — simultaneously.

"IT COULD well be that for today's single female renter, variety —at least in apartments — is the spice of life. It certainly affords some sharply contrasting alternative life styles for America's nearly 9 million unmarried women," Gaber adds.

The Bible teaches forgiveness. But how can I teach the children to forgive a man who hurts them so? — DESPERATE MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER:

Why not instead teach your children to accept what they can't change, and stop filling their lives with resentment — as you apparently do?

If they can't have a regular father, the next best thing is to learn they can function very well without him. — H.

P.S. On the other hand, are you quite sure part of the problem doesn't lie with you? Read on:-

DEAR HELEN:

I love my children, but I can't compete with my wife's possessiveness. Whatever I tried with them, she vetoed. On the few times she'd allow me to take one of them somewhere, I'd be blamed for his "catching a cold," or otherwise endangered. When we'd go places as a family, I got the criticism for suggesting "crazy risks." Her idea of a big event is to let the kids camp out in the back yard, with her sleeping nearby to "protect" them.

Well, finally, I stopped trying. Since she wants to be their only parent, and since she badmouths my efforts and influences the children away from me, I decided to give in to her wishes.

Now, Helen, she tells everyone I'm an unnatural father who doesn't care for his kids. This was one of her reasons for the divorce.

She accuses me of caring more for the children of the woman I am presently seeing, but it isn't a matter of love — it's just that they accept me, where before I was — SHUT OUT

P.S. Should I carry out the farce of visiting rights when all I get is distrust and antagonism?

DAR S.O.:

You might break down that wall of distrust if your children could visit with you outside their home. It won't be easy to reverse years of brainwashing, but at least you can try. — H.

P.S. to readers: These two letters came from different parts of the country. But somehow they belong together, don't you agree?

DEAR HELEN:

I know how "Turned Off" feels, for I too can't stand my husband's smoke: the stale tobacco air everywhere, burn holes, my children's inhaling all this harmful smoke, not to mention what it does to me.

My husband was warned by the doctor that he must give up cigarettes, but he uses everything that displeases or upsets him as an excuse to light up.

I wish I could be so lucky as to have separate bedrooms. It's hard to feel love for someone who cares so little about others. — BREATHLESS

Got a problem? An adult subject for discussion? You can talk it over in her column if you write to Helen Bottel, c/o the Independent-Journal, PO Box 330, 1040 B St., San Rafael, Ca. 94902.

MAUREEN MADERA
Engaged to be wed

Engagement Of Maureen Madera Told

Mr. and Mrs. Christian Madera of San Rafael announce the engagement of their daughter Marueen to Lt. Don Michael Crites of Bluffton, Ohio.

Maureen is the sister of Aileen, Kevin, Tim and Brian Madera of San Rafael. She is a graduate of San Rafael High School and attends College of Marin.

Michael is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Don T. Crites of Bluffton and the brother of Scott, John and Garry Crites, also of Bluffton. A graduate of Lima Shawnee High School in Lima, Ohio, and the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., he is serving aboard the USS Ponchatoula, stationed in the Pacific. He is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Clark of Bluffton and Mrs. Lucille Crites of Wapakoneta, Ohio.

The couple plans to be married in August and will live in Hawaii, where the future bride plans to continue her education.

'The Swingle' May Be Just An Image

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The image of the swinging single woman, the "swingle," may be just that — an image.

"Reality points to a varied picture: today's unmarried woman definitely cannot be typecast, which is particularly true if where-to-live preferences are any indication."

So reports Robert W. Gaber, president and chief executive officer of a mortgage company headquartered here.

Gaber notes that many single women are economic-security conscious but, rather than searching for a high-salaried male to support them through life, they seek stability on their own — through their careers, friendships and choice of residence.

"THE TREND is reflected currently in burgeoning numbers of single women today renting apartments in older neighborhoods.

"Instead of automatically opting for the 'swingles complex,' women carefully consider a number of factors before signing leases," he notes.

Gaber lists some of the attributes of older apartment buildings often cited by single women:

Diversity in renters' ages and backgrounds. Numerous unmarried women view rentals in older buildings as an opportunity to associate with a wide mix of people — not solely those of their age or marital status.

"Frequently, younger singles say they appreciate having older persons near to counsel them — to give them guidance and stability," Gaber observes.

Privacy. Women renters point out that there is little pressure to socialize with neighbors in recycled apartment houses — "It's a matter of individual preference, not management policy," one explains.

The charm, character and tradition accompanying an older dwelling and neighborhood have special appeal to certain prospective renters.

"Ultimately, the selection of an apartment —or condominium — is a highly personal decision. What is one woman's dream dwelling is another's nightmare," Gaber added.

"SOME SINGLE women simply prefer the yesteryear charm of an older building to a new or modern structure," Gaber said.

Locale. Renters — increasingly energy-conscious — are turning to renovated apartments close to town in order to eliminate or reduce commuting.

"Further, women who work long hours often choose to reside near their employment so that when their job day is over, they can be home in 5 or 10 minutes," Gaber says.

He stressed that this recent pattern by no means precludes the continued development of single-oriented apartment complexes.

"Today, there are about 975,000 more single, divorced and widowed women than in 1970. The sheer growth in the ranks of these unmarrieds means that both housing concepts can survive —and thrive — simultaneously.

"IT COULD well be that for today's single female renter, variety —at least in apartments — is the spice of life. It certainly affords some sharply contrasting alternative life styles for America's nearly 9 million unmarried women," Gaber adds.

The two-year-old Petaluma Girls' Club, which has been operating out of makeshift quarters in city recreation facilities, has leased an old Victorian building for its new headquarters.

Yes, Motherin' Is A Trip

By SANDRA HAGGERTY
The Christian Science Monitor
News Service

SALT LAKE CITY — "Do you write for the newspaper?" asked my oldest daughter, then 4 years old.

"Well, yes, but how did you know?" I had never discussed my new column with her.

"Oh, I saw your picture in the paper at school."

"Well, that was nice of your teacher to put my column on the bulletin board." (Beginner's big head)

"Oh, it wasn't on the bulletin board. It was on the floor."

"Someone took it off the bulletin board and threw it on the floor?" (Beginner's paranoia)

"NO," SHE shrugged. "Can I go outside and play?"

"Then how did it get on the floor?"

"How did what get on the floor?" Karen's waiting for me to play."

"How did my picture get on the floor!"

"Mommie, we always put newspaper under the painting easels at school. That's where I saw it. There was red paint on you."

That was just one of many incidents which made it clear my children were not going to be impressed with me as a writer/career woman. All they care about is the quality of my motherin' and, thankfully, it isn't even a matter of quality. If I'm on the scene (burning the sausage and scorching the pancakes) they give me credit for being a good mom.

Motherhood has been under attack for a number of reasons, some of them sound. But motherin' is still one of the greatest experiences in the world. It's one of the few situations where unequivocal love can flourish.

The returns are immeasurable. Children (one or 20) can supply you with all the pain and pleasure any human being can absorb. The important thing is that you feel.

FOR YEARS I have written at home because I felt I should be home with my youngsters rather than shipping them off to baby sitters. I have always left the door of my office open so they could wander in. At some point, this total access to mother became a pain in the neck — particularly when I had a deadline to meet. So, in a nonmotherly fashion, I would scream, "Not another word until I finish this column."

Shortly I would feel a little tap on the shoulder and be handed a note by a tight-lipped daughter.

Over the years I have received hundreds of little notes in progressively mature scrawls: "Dear Mommie, would you please part my hair exactly in the middle?"

"Dear Mom, can I go over to Jocelyn's house?"

"Dear Mother, one of your daughters is going to get a sock in the head if she doesn't get out of my room."

"Dear Sandra Haggerty, may I please wear your green sweater?"

Motherin' is a very special trip.

Consumer Education Course Announced

"Does Your Family Meet Your Needs?" is the topic to be discussed at 10 a.m. Thursday at the Consumer Education Resource Center in Wood Hall, Tamalpais High School.

Jean Hayes and Lothar Salin, co-therapists, will give the presentation. Maud Coggs, consumer education director, will be the moderator.

'Buy America' Theme Of Recent Fashion Show

"Buy America," complete with drums, trumpets and marching band, was the theme of the Fashion Group's recent showing in New York City.

Presented first was a sports collection featuring sweatshirt, jogging suit, tennis dress and official Olympic stars 'n stripes swimsuit, in red, white and blue.

Looser fits in suitings included shirt-like longer jackets, blousons, bubble tops, and little fly away jackets, mostly topping off the big skirts.

Tent, one-shoulder dresses and sweater suits appeared softer in texture, looser in construction.

Lingerie and at-home looks serve a double purpose this season. They can stay at home or go to bed, or they can step out for dining and dancing.

But the big fashion news is in rainwear which says good-bye to the raincoat and hello to the rainsuit, poncho, tenty jacket and jumpsuit.

This season, gently flowing chiffon is on ultra-feminine gowns with cotton candy shades arranged in attractive floral prints.

Color ideas favor linen-like tones; soft, sunshine pastels (mauve, pink, blue, yellow and apricot) as well as the sexy red and black.

American "ready-to-wear" fashions, the main features, were backed by stylish footwear, legwear, hats and veilings, gloves, and scarves.

Marin Club Will Host Gathering

Marin Toastmistress Club will host the Six Club Council 3 of the Northbay area at a meeting tomorrow at the Holiday Inn in Terra Linda.

Clubs from Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Napa and two from Vallejo will join the Marin club members for the meeting. The council chairman is Shirley Etemadfar of Terra Linda.

Other officers who will be installed at the council meeting are Elsie Babock of Mare Island, vice chairman; Betty Huffman of Vallejo, secretary, and Beverly Roose of Napa, treasurer.

Christine Parker of San Rafael, Marin Club president, is heading the host committee.

Looser fits in suitings included shirt-like longer jackets, blousons, bubble tops, and little fly away jackets, mostly topping off the big skirts.

Tent, one-shoulder dresses and sweater suits appeared softer in texture, looser in construction.

Lingerie and at-home looks serve a double purpose this season. They can stay at home or go to bed, or they can step out for dining and dancing.

But the big fashion news is in rainwear which says good-bye to the raincoat and hello to the rainsuit, poncho, tenty jacket and jumpsuit.

This season, gently flowing chiffon is on ultra-feminine gowns with cotton candy shades arranged in attractive floral prints.

Color ideas favor linen-like tones; soft, sunshine pastels (mauve, pink, blue, yellow and apricot) as well as the sexy red and black.

American "ready-to-wear" fashions, the main features, were backed by stylish footwear, legwear, hats and veilings, gloves, and scarves.

Phone Service To Latinos Held Lagging

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The telephone company does not provide adequate service to customers who speak only Spanish, according to two Stanford University graduate students who carried out a study on what happens when a Spanish-speaking person makes a phone call.

Spanish speaking people "are repeatedly cut off by operators, must wait two to four minutes for information, are constantly asked to repeat themselves and are transferred from operator to operator," said Juan Gonzales.

Gonzales and Mario Evangelista, both graduate students in communication at Stanford, said they made numerous test calls, speaking only Spanish, to see what happened.

They found, they said, that it usually took seven times as long to get service from an operator as it did when they called speaking English.

"Our people are paying for telephone service," said Evangelista. "But we are not receiving the service we are paying for."

The two researchers said the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. has claimed since 1970 that Spanish calls are adequately handled. But they said surveys as recently as this year show the same problems.

Gonzales said the problem is not just one of convenience to Spanish speaking people.

"Prompt and adequate telephone service is a necessity, particularly in emergency situations. When people are calling the police, fire department or ambulance a few minutes can mean the difference between life and death," he said.

The researchers said 15 per cent of the population of San Francisco is Latino and that half of these people speak only Spanish.

Landscape Plans For Center Approved

Landscape plans for the proposed expansion of the Novak Square Shopping Center, Novato Boulevard and Wilson Avenue, have been approved by the Novato Plan Review Committee.

The plan includes landscaping in the parking lot to break up "the sea of asphalt" appearance, the planning staff reported.

South Must Resign Himself To Defeat—700 Or 300 Points?

There comes a time in every bridge player's life when he must remember what the old folks used to tell him: If you close your eyes and wish hard, something good will happen. (The right kind of old folks used to add that the good thing may happen to somebody else.)

MAKES A WISH

Take the case of an expert in the European championships. He closed his eyes and wished hard, but his team wasn't a bit grateful to him.

West led the king and then the queen of diamonds, and declarer friend ruffed the second. He led a club to dummy's queen to return a trump.

East naturally stepped up with the king of spades and returned a club to South's ace. It was at this moment that South closed his eyes and wished for a miraculous trump break.

NO MIRACLES

There were no miracles. When South overtook the king of hearts with dummy's ace in order to lead a second trump, East didn't produce the hoped-for ace of trumps. Instead, East discarded a heart.

West took the ten and ace of trumps, leaving the jack of trumps in his own hand and the lone queen of trumps in South's hand. Then West led another diamond to punch out declarer's last trump.

DOWN 700 POINTS

West got three more tricks — his jack of trumps and two diamonds. South was down four, for a loss of 700 points.

If South resigned himself to a bad trump break, he would never lead a second round of trumps. He would just lead out his good clubs, allowing West to ruff. The defenders would get four trump tricks and one diamond, and South's penalty would be only 300 points. No cause for dancing in the streets, but better than losing 700 points.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one club and the next player bids one spade.

You hold:
♠- 7 5 4 ♦- J 4
♥- A Q 10 8 4 ♣- Q 7 3.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs.

The hand isn't strong enough for a bid of two hearts but is good enough for some action. Perhaps you will get a chance to show the hearts later.

A Richard Nixon Joins The Army

MISSOULA, Mont. (UPI) — Richard Nixon has been recruited by Robin Hood, but there's no promise of adventure in Sherwood Forest.

Richard A. Nixon, Seeley Lake, Mont., joined the Army yesterday. Army recruiter Robin Hood stood at his side.

"I get a lot of comment about my name," said Nixon. "But I try to keep out of the public eye."

Hood, an 18-year Army veteran and native of upstate New York, has a 16-year-old son, also named Robin.

"My mother must have had a sense of humor," he said.

Christopher Lewis Is Fined $500

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The 29-year-old son of actress Loretta Young was fined $500 and put on five years probation yesterday for his role in a film-making ring which allegedly coerced young boys into performing homosexual acts in movies.

Christopher Lewis was also warned by Superior Court Judge M. Ross Bigelow that if he returned to court on similar charges in the future, "I will most probably send you off to state prison."

Lewis and 13 other men were arrested last year. The county grand jury later indicted them on sex charges.

Lewis pleaded no contest to a child molestation charge April 4.

Bigelow, who ruled that Lewis was not a mentally disordered sex offender, said his decision not to send Lewis to state prison was based in past on the way inmates treated convicted child molesters.

Lewis, a Beverly Hills film producer, was accused of making "chicken gay" films in which boys ranging in age from 6 to 17 were used as "actors."

Abduction Case Tests Ordered

SANTA ROSA (UPI) — A psychiatric examination has been ordered for Sharon Gilcrease, 31, accused of abducting three-week old Marshall Jones Sr. last week.

The examination was ordered by Municipal Judge Kiernan Hyland when the defendant appeared at a hearing and asked for reduction in her $1,000 bail.

Hood, an 18-year Army veteran and native of upstate New York, has a 16-year-old son, also named Robin.

"My mother must have had a sense of humor," he said.

Christopher Lewis Is Fined $500

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The 29-year-old son of actress Loretta Young was fined $500 and put on five years probation yesterday for his role in a film-making ring which allegedly coerced young boys into performing homosexual acts in movies.

Christopher Lewis was also warned by Superior Court Judge M. Ross Bigelow that if he returned to court on similar charges in the future, "I will most probably send you off to state prison."

Lewis and 13 other men were arrested last year. The county grand jury later indicted them on sex charges.

Lewis pleaded no contest to a child molestation charge April 4.

Bigelow, who ruled that Lewis was not a mentally disordered sex offender, said his decision not to send Lewis to state prison was based in past on the way inmates treated convicted child molesters.

Lewis, a Beverly Hills film producer, was accused of making "chicken gay" films in which boys ranging in age from 6 to 17 were used as "actors."

Abduction Case Tests Ordered

SANTA ROSA (UPI) — A psychiatric examination has been ordered for Sharon Gilcrease, 31, accused of abducting three-week old Marshall Jones Sr. last week.

The examination was ordered by Municipal Judge Kiernan Hyland when the defendant appeared at a hearing and asked for reduction in her $1,000 bail.

$60,000 Sought For Bus Service

The staff of the Golden Gate Recreational Travel Study has applied for $60,000 in federal funds to increase weekend bus service to West Marin recreational areas, the board of control of the study group was told yesterday.

Peggy Woodring, director of the group, said the money would enable the Golden Gate Transit to expand its bus service to Drake's Beach in Point Reyes National Seashore. In addition, it would provide additional bus connections to Marin from San Francisco.

The study group has applied for the funds from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration.

The weekend shuttle bus from Seashore Headquarters to Limantour Estero will be continused this summer, Miss Woodring added. She said a $5,000 park service budget increase may make possible an additional shuttle run — from Bolinas to Palomarin at the Seashore's southern boundary.

In other business the board hired Goodrich-Solnit Associates — for a fee of $25,000 — to study ways to predict recreational travel patterns and to determine what the effects would be on recreation areas if they were accessible only by public transportation. It chose Smith-Curtis Associates to design and evaluate transportation systems to and within recreation areas for a fee of $37,500.

Unusual Location

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — A construction company is to throw a luncheon for 100 dignitaries in a sewer, to celebrate completion of work on a new drainage system. The $600 cost includes a temporary staircase for guests.

INFANT FINALLY MAKES IT

Mrs. Margaret Aldridge of Denver is all smiles as she prepares to leave a hospital with her 3-month-old baby, Lyhia Lee. The premature infant was born Feb. 16, 1974, and was kept alive with a cardiac pacemaker unit after she developed a dangerously slow heartbeat. Lyhia Lee is believed to be the first infant in the country to receive such treatment. The happy reunion occurred yesterday.

Black Point Inn Has Colorful History, Many Stories To Tell

Back in the 1880s and for several decades after that, the old two-story frame structure that still stands at 10 Grandview Avenue in Black Point had quite a story to tell.

In various stages of its existence it was a roadhouse (probably not too savory), tavern, stage coach stop, general store, bootleg joint — even at one time a church when there was no other facility in which good citizens in the area could hold services. According to the manner in which it functioned at specific times it may have had other names, but mostly it was known as Black Point Inn, as it is today.

During recent years it has been the consuming pride, joy and headache of Jess Fisher, its owner, as a family restaurant and bar. Jess originally sought to keep it in its pristine form as much as possible — but some modifications were necessary. In these days of relentless building codes and safety regulations, any time the ownership of such a venerable place changes hands just about the entire circulatory system and vital organs have to be "brought up to code." It nearly broke Jess to do it — but he managed. If some kind of process like this could be applied to humans, some of us might acquire immortality.

But Black Point Inn still does maintain its historical charm and the power to call up imaginings of its bygone years.

Inside there is a long bar and dining rooms to the right and to the left. One of these rooms was laid out by Jess in his remodeling to take advantage of its proximity to the lounge and entertainment on weekends. This week, by the way, there is a new duo booked for Fridays and Saturdays called By Request — a pair of guitarists offering both country and popular music. During the midweek usually only the old dining room is used.

As it stands today, Black Point Inn is a place where you can dine reasonably and well — thanks to chef Ralph Pillola, whose menu is not an extensive one but sufficiently varied to please almost anyone. Probably his most popular entree is the scampi Fiorentina ($5.25 on the complete dinner). Another favorite is the steak Diane at $6.

Other selections include veal parmigiana ($5.25), chicken saute sec ($4.25), turbot Piemontese ($4.95), New York cut sirloin at $6.95 and cross rib roast on weekends at $4.95. These prices include soup, salad, risotto or potato, vegetable, dessert and beverage. A la carte is $1 less. There are also often $3.95 dinner specials — several of them on Sundays.

Ralph is Italian but speaks fluent Spanish due to his several years as a chef on liners in the South American trade. I have suggested that he might add a South American special or two to his menu and he is considering it.

There's a banquet room available for seating 20 to 50 persons. And Jess added a swimming pool a few years ago for fair weather dunking.

In time, Black Point may become more distinctive on the map. Nearby, across the Sonoma County line, there's a move to create a yacht harbor at the mouth of the Petaluma River. It could become quite an attraction.

PERHAPS NOT as historical as Black Point Inn, but certainly now a landmark in Marin restaurants is Marin Joe's in Corte Madera. We congratulate owners Adolf, Romano and Quirico Della Santina on their 28th anniversary in business here this month.

There is no doubt that this eating place has flourished over the years and still does — just look at the parked cars in front of it and up the road next time you go by on the highway at lunch or dinner time.

Officially the Della Santinas will celebrate the occasion on the 28th and 29th of the month. If you should happen in for dinner on one of those days you'll be treated to complimentary champagne with your meal.

HISTORY — There is still more than just a touch of history at the Black Point Inn, and there is a bar and a varied menu. There's also a banquet room.

SPEAKING OF anniversaries, last week at the Grotto in San Rafael Ursula and Stan Valan completely forgot about their first at their new highway location until a waitress reminded them. But then it was Friday and they were too busy.

SOMETHING NEW at the Dock and the Windjammer in Tiburon which are under the same ownership:

Instead of figuring the regular restaurant markup, both places will now serve you any bottle of wine in the house with your meals for the same price you would pay if you bought it at a retail store.

NOW FEATURED on Wednesday nights only at the Executive Lounge in San Rafael are Kid Kahoutek and the Shooting Stars. Their type of music is billed as "Rock 'n' Bop to the Sounds of the 50s." Good entertainment and good for dancing.

ANSWERING INQUIRIES — Yes, Gregory Seubert is still operating his Gregory's restaurant at Albion, Mendocino County, since the recent death of his wife Mary Alyce, though he feels her loss keenly.

Service is still the same — Wednesdays through Sundays. Dinners only from 5 p.m. Make reservations on weekends — the restaurant has been exceptionally busy Saturdays and Sundays.

THE FOUR-SIXTY-FOUR Magnolia restaurant in Larkspur still maintains its changeable menu, varying entrees almost daily.

If you should go in tonight or

Federal Body To Control Commodity Market Urged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A top executive of one of the nation's largest brokerage firms yesterday urged Congress to approve a bill creating a strong, independent federal commission to regulate the $500 billion a year commodity futures trading industry.

Paul H. Franklin, a vice president of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., told the Senate Agriculture Committee he favors most provisions of a House-approved bill calling for strengthened and expanded federal policing of commodity futures markets, including control over many commodities like metals which are now exempt from federal regulation.

The House bill, however, would turn the new police powers over to a semi-independent commission made up of part-time members including the Secretary of Agriculture. Franklin testified he favored pending Senate proposals to make the commission completely independent with full-time members.

Spokesmen for the Silver Users Association, Inc., testified they favor quick inclusion of silver futures in the list of commodities subject to government regulation. They said the silver market now is dominated by speculation and "is presently alleged to be cornered by a single individual."

If futures trading in silver were regulated in the same way the government controls trading in products like wheat and corn, "this alleged corner in silver would not be possible on exchanges in this country," a spokesman said.

Witnesses for the New York Cocoa Exchange and the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange warned that sugar traders would desert the U.S. and trade on the London market if the government is given power to order emergency suspensions on American commodity markets. But an official of the National Farmers Union endorsed strict policing of commodity markets and called for creation of farm commodity reserve stocks to ease wild fluctuations in commodity prices.

Reinecke Ruling Date Is Changed

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — A federal judge has delayed until Monday a ruling on Lt. Gov. Ed Reinecke's request for a dismissal of a perjury indictment against him, Reinecke's office indicated yesterday.

A spokesman for Reinecke could offer no explanation for the change.

U.S. District Court Judge Barrington Parker in Washington, D.C., originally scheduled a decision on the motion for today.

Court Upholds Tax Conviction

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The federal appeals court has upheld the income tax conviction of Richard Hawk, 41-year-old attorney who defended Juan Corona in a sensational mass murder trial.

Hawk was found guilty last year on two counts of avoiding federal income taxes. A jury acquitted him on several other counts.

The lawyer defended Corona, a Mexican farm labor contractor charged with 25 murders. Corona was convicted and sentenced to life in prison.

Legal Services Veto Is Asked

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Gov. Ronald Reagan has called on President Nixon to veto a legal services bill because he said it would subject states to "virtually unlimited harassment" by government-paid lawyers.

The compromise measure by Rep. Albert Quie, R-Minn., has been reported out for a vote by a Senate-House conference committee.

The proposal would establish a public corporation headed by 11 directors appointed by the President to furnish legal aid.

tomorrow night you'll find four selections — roast leg of lamb stuffed with feta cheese and garlic; coquille St. Jacques a la Lyonnaise; chicken cordon bleu (stuffed with prosciutto and baby Swiss cheese and topped with a shallot mushroom sauce); and meatless dolmas (grape leaves stuffed with rice, pinenuts, currants and green onions, topped with a lemon egg sauce. Prices are from $5.

For Sunday there's roast beef with garlic bearnaise. Or — if you like to go out for brunch on Saturday or Sunday you'll find eggs Benedict, eggs Lorraine, eggs Florentine, omelets and lunch items.

Make advance reservations.

SINCE WRITING about Le Chalet Basque last week, there's been a new addition there — or I should say, the return of an old face.

Remember Joaquin Elizondo, who used to tend bar before he left on a visit to his native Spain last year? He's back — but this time as second chef, helping Pierre Giavina in the kitchen. You may not see so much of him, but you'll be eating some of his food. He's always wanted to specialize in cooking — and he's a natural at it.

And just to reverse things — Pedro Eizaguierre, who has recently been bartender, has returned to Spain for a spell. He'll be back in a few months.

AND SPEAKING of bartenders and bars, The Octopus in Novato has applied for the on sale general liquor license which used to be used by Harold and Lilo Heller at the former Palate in Mill Valley.

Izzy Villner plans on extending the present wine bar — but the license, if approved for the Octopus, is not likely to be activated much before the middle of June.

Federal Body To Control Commodity Market Urged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A top executive of one of the nation's largest brokerage firms yesterday urged Congress to approve a bill creating a strong, independent federal commission to regulate the $500 billion a year commodity futures trading industry.

Paul H. Franklin, a vice president of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., told the Senate Agriculture Committee he favors most provisions of a House-approved bill calling for strengthened and expanded federal policing of commodity futures markets, including control over many commodities like metals which are now exempt from federal regulation.

The House bill, however, would turn the new police powers over to a semi-independent commission made up of part-time members including the Secretary of Agriculture. Franklin testified he favored pending Senate proposals to make the commission completely independent with full-time members.

Spokesmen for the Silver Users Association, Inc., testified they favor quick inclusion of silver futures in the list of commodities subject to government regulation. They said the silver market now is dominated by speculation and "is presently alleged to be cornered by a single individual."

If futures trading in silver were regulated in the same way the government controls trading in products like wheat and corn, "this alleged corner in silver would not be possible on exchanges in this country," a spokesman said.

Witnesses for the New York Cocoa Exchange and the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange warned that sugar traders would desert the U.S. and trade on the London market if the government is given power to order emergency suspensions on American commodity markets. But an official of the National Farmers Union endorsed strict policing of commodity markets and called for creation of farm commodity reserve stocks to ease wild fluctuations in commodity prices.

Reinecke Ruling Date Is Changed

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — A federal judge has delayed until Monday a ruling on Lt. Gov. Ed Reinecke's request for a dismissal of a perjury indictment against him, Reinecke's office indicated yesterday.

A spokesman for Reinecke could offer no explanation for the change.

U.S. District Court Judge Barrington Parker in Washington, D.C., originally scheduled a decision on the motion for today.

tomorrow night you'll find four selections — roast leg of lamb stuffed with feta cheese and garlic; coquille St. Jacques a la Lyonnaise; chicken cordon bleu (stuffed with prosciutto and baby Swiss cheese and topped with a shallot mushroom sauce); and meatless dolmas (grape leaves stuffed with rice, pinenuts, currants and green onions, topped with a lemon egg sauce. Prices are from $5.

For Sunday there's roast beef with garlic bearnaise. Or — if you like to go out for brunch on Saturday or Sunday you'll find eggs Benedict, eggs Lorraine, eggs Florentine, omelets and lunch items.

Make advance reservations.

SINCE WRITING about Le Chalet Basque last week, there's been a new addition there — or I should say, the return of an old face.

Remember Joaquin Elizondo, who used to tend bar before he left on a visit to his native Spain last year? He's back — but this time as second chef, helping Pierre Giavina in the kitchen. You may not see so much of him, but you'll be eating some of his food. He's always wanted to specialize in cooking — and he's a natural at it.

And just to reverse things — Pedro Eizaguierre, who has recently been bartender, has returned to Spain for a spell. He'll be back in a few months.

AND SPEAKING of bartenders and bars, The Octopus in Novato has applied for the on sale general liquor license which used to be used by Harold and Lilo Heller at the former Palate in Mill Valley.

Izzy Villner plans on extending the present wine bar — but the license, if approved for the Octopus, is not likely to be activated much before the middle of June.

Court Upholds Tax Conviction

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The federal appeals court has upheld the income tax conviction of Richard Hawk, 41-year-old attorney who defended Juan Corona in a sensational mass murder trial.

Hawk was found guilty last year on two counts of avoiding federal income taxes. A jury acquitted him on several other counts.

The lawyer defended Corona, a Mexican farm labor contractor charged with 25 murders. Corona was convicted and sentenced to life in prison.

Legal Services Veto Is Asked

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Gov. Ronald Reagan has called on President Nixon to veto a legal services bill because he said it would subject states to "virtually unlimited harassment" by government-paid lawyers.

The compromise measure by Rep. Albert Quie, R-Minn., has been reported out for a vote by a Senate-House conference committee.

The proposal would establish a public corporation headed by 11 directors appointed by the President to furnish legal aid.

REUNION TOMORROW

San Rafael Grads Of '24 Recall The Good Things

By NELS JOHNSON

Bulldogs! Bulldogs! Fight them all the way!

The remainder of San Rafael High School's cheer of yesteryear has been long forgotten, but graduate Warren H. Williams, 68, remembers that it was a rousing anthem, appropriate for the Class of 1924.

And so does another 68-year-old graduate of the Class of '24, Josephine (Joie) Codoni Leary Burke.

"We fought and died for our high school. We loved our school, we really did," she said.

Occasion for the outpouring of schoolday sentiment is the Class of 1924's 50th reunion, set for 6:30 p.m. tomorrow at the San Rafael Elks Club. Williams and Mrs. Burke, along with several other classmates, helped organize the event.

WARREN H. WILLIAMS
Reunion planned for . . .

JOSEPHINE BURKE
. . . Class of 1924

Twenty-four members of the Class of 1924 will attend the reunion, according to Williams, a former city postmaster. The class totaled 60 members, but 17 are dead, nine couldn't be located and the rest can't come, he said.

The Class of 1924 was the last to graduate from the old high school on E Street, the first class to graduate in cap and gowns, and boasted a bruising football team, Mrs. Burke recalled.

"Diplomas were handed out by Thomas P. Boyd, president of the San Rafael Board of Education, at the Orpheus Theater, now called the San Rafael Theater," she said.

Both graduates said student behavior and dress have been subjects of the greatest change over the years since they read Jack London's "The Call of the Wild," James Fenimore Cooper's "The Deerslayer" and George Eliot's "Silas Marner."

"Don't let me get started on behavior," declared Mrs. Burke, a former teacher. "There was no liquor and no drugs in our days," she said.

The change in student dress, she noted, has been dramatic.

Girls in 1924 were required to wear uniforms — white middy blouses, blue pleated skirts, black stockings and black lace shoes — thanks to the local Mothers Club, she said. The mothers got together and required uniforms to prevent girls from imitating the permissive, see-through look of flappers like Clara Bow, Mrs. Burke explained.

Boys generally wore corduroy pants and topcoats, although they were not required to dress in uniforms, Williams said.

Williams, a native of San Rafael, joined the local post office as a carrier in 1926 and worked his way up the ranks to postmaster, a position he held from 1956 through 1966. He has been secretary of the Marin Masonic Lodge 191 for the past 30 years.

Mrs. Burke, who enrolled in college after high school graduation, began work as a teacher in 1927. She has since taught in San Rafael and Hamilton Air Force Base and St. Vincent's School for Boys, as well as logging 18 years at Dixie School and 14 years at Santa Margarita School.

And although Warren E. Williams is proud of his days as postmaster, and Josephine Codoni Leary Burke is proud of her 42-year teaching career, both regard their high school days with a special love.

Bulldogs! Bulldogs! Fight them all the way . . .

'Gone With The Wind' To Be '76 TV Feature

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Gone With The Wind," the 1939 film classic that has sold more theater admissions than any other motion picture, will be shown on television for the first time in 1976.

NBC-TV is paying $5 million — the highest price ever paid for a single program — for a single showing in 1976, UPI has learned.

The movie has been periodically released by MGM since it opened in Atlanta — the setting of much of the film — in 1939. It was technically renovated in 1967 for large-screen projection.

The standard price paid for networks for two runs of a successful movie is $750,000, though "blockbusters" bring higher prices.

U.S. Senate Hopeful Sets Novato Talk

State Sen. H. L. (Bill) Richardson, R-Arcadia, candidate for the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate, will speak to the Novato Republican Women's Club, Federated, on Tuesday.

The club meets at 11 a.m. at Nave Lanes, Ignacio. The meeting will include a luncheon.

SLA Imitators Face Bank Rap

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Three men and two women were charged yesterday with conspiring to rob a bank while posing as members of the Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA) and kidnaped heiress Patricia Hearst.

The plot, according to authorities, involved dressing one of the women, Patricia Ann Jarvis, 30, to resemble Miss Hearst and arming her with a submachine gun. Police said the group planned to rob the City and County Bank in suburban Concord, Tenn.

Charged with bank robbery conspiracy along with Miss Jarvis were Robert Perry, 20, Michael Hutchinson, Donald Hickey, 32, and Ernest Hendrickson, 28.

Six Students Honored For Career Preparation

Six high school and junior college students were honored twice this week by the Marin County Industry-Education Council, as winners in the council's annual career preparation contest.

The winners were Scott Nickel of Terra Linda High School, judged best in the fine arts field for his studies in pottery; David Angelini of San Rafael High School, industrial arts auto mechanic student; Angie Tescallo, also San Rafael High, in office occupations; Pat Rombelaine, Redwood High School, work experience; Susan Furlong, Tomales High School, home economics, and Anne Kopel, College of Marin, retailing.

R. E. Corrick, chairman of the awards program, reported the winners, parents and teachers they selected as being most helpful to their career plans, were guests of the council at an awards dinner Tuesday. The students also attended the council's annual meeting yesterday, and were introduced.

Cheryl Campbell, Novato High School student on the council's board of directors, also received a special award yesterday for her leadership in the careers program.

Students from all 10 high schools and two junior colleges in Marin competed. They were judged on their career preparedness efforts both in studies and in actual work.

The council installed Ruth Truett of Tiburon as president at the annual meeting, succeeding Macia Greil.

LOSE FAT!
THE "MODEL-ETTS" WAY HELPS CURB YOUR APPETITE
HELPS YOU LOSE THAT EXTRA WEIGHT
■ NO CALORIE COUNTING! ■ NO EXERCISES!
■ NO SPECIAL DIETS!

Thanks to a group of New York doctors, you can now lose pounds of ugly fat without going on any special diet, without cutting out any special foods.

HELPS REDUCE HUNGRY MOMENTS

These New York doctors discovered a food adjuvant called "MODEL-ETTS."

"Model-etts" does remarkable things. It helps you cut down your caloric intake by a natural automatic curbing of the appetite and of the desire for foods, resulting automatically in a reduced intake of food.

Before "Model-etts" was offered to you, it was tested clinically by the doctors on a large group of non-glandular overweight men and women.

The doctors carefully checked results, and here is what they found:
1. Weight losses of 6 to 20 pounds without any ill effects whatsoever.
2. 96% of the men and women who used "Model-etts" lost weight.

"Model-etts" is absolutely safe. It is a food adjuvant - not a drug.

So, start today to shed those unwanted pounds and inches. If your condition is glandular or organic, see your doctor. "Model-etts" may help you stay on the diet your doctor recommends. Ask him about it.

You can get a full month's supply of "Model-etts" for $3.00 on money back guarantee. In clinical tests, "Model-etts" was 96% successful. "Model-etts" may not be 100% successful in all cases, but you take no risk in trying "Model-etts" on our Money Back Guarantee.

Come to General Nutrition to get "MODEL-ETTS." The sooner you start, the sooner you may have the loss of weight you yearn for.

Sounds too good to be true, but it is true!

How Model-etts Curbs Your Appetite
In the opinion of the supervising physician, based on the average of weight losses in the clinical tests, his calculations showed that 1 Model-etts Wafer has the hunger satisfying capacity of 1 pound boiled potatoes or 4 eggs or 5 slices of white bread, yet it contains only 6 calories.

REUNION TOMORROW

San Rafael Grads Of '24 Recall The Good Things

By NELS JOHNSON

Bulldogs! Bulldogs! Fight them all the way!

The remainder of San Rafael High School's cheer of yesteryear has been long forgotten, but graduate Warren H. Williams, 68, remembers that it was a rousing anthem, appropriate for the Class of 1924.

And so does another 68-year-old graduate of the Class of '24, Josephine (Joie) Codoni Leary Burke.

"We fought and died for our high school. We loved our school, we really did," she said.

Occasion for the outpouring of schoolday sentiment is the Class of 1924's 50th reunion, set for 6:30 p.m. tomorrow at the San Rafael Elks Club. Williams and Mrs. Burke, along with several other classmates, helped organize the event.

WARREN H. WILLIAMS
Reunion planned for . . .

JOSEPHINE BURKE
. . . Class of 1924

Twenty-four members of the Class of 1924 will attend the reunion, according to Williams, a former city postmaster. The class totaled 60 members, but 17 are dead, nine couldn't be located and the rest can't come, he said.

The Class of 1924 was the last to graduate from the old high school on E Street, the first class to graduate in cap and gowns, and boasted a bruising football team, Mrs. Burke recalled.

"Diplomas were handed out by Thomas P. Boyd, president of the San Rafael Board of Education, at the Orpheus Theater, now called the San Rafael Theater," she said.

Both graduates said student behavior and dress have been subjects of the greatest change over the years since they read Jack London's "The Call of the Wild," James Fenimore Cooper's "The Deerslayer" and George Eliot's "Silas Marner."

"Don't let me get started on behavior," declared Mrs. Burke, a former teacher. "There was no liquor and no drugs in our days," she said.

The change in student dress, she noted, has been dramatic.

Girls in 1924 were required to wear uniforms — white middy blouses, blue pleated skirts, black stockings and black lace shoes — thanks to the local Mothers Club, she said. The mothers got together and required uniforms to prevent girls from imitating the permissive, see-through look of flappers like Clara Bow, Mrs. Burke explained.

Boys generally wore corduroy pants and topcoats, although they were not required to dress in uniforms, Williams said.

Williams, a native of San Rafael, joined the local post office as a carrier in 1926 and worked his way up the ranks to postmaster, a position he held from 1956 through 1966. He has been secretary of the Marin Masonic Lodge 191 for the past 30 years.

Mrs. Burke, who enrolled in college after high school graduation, began work as a teacher in 1927. She has since taught in San Rafael and Hamilton Air Force Base and St. Vincent's School for Boys, as well as logging 18 years at Dixie School and 14 years at Santa Margarita School.

And although Warren E. Williams is proud of his days as postmaster, and Josephine Codoni Leary Burke is proud of her 42-year teaching career, both regard their high school days with a special love.

Bulldogs! Bulldogs! Fight them all the way . . .

'Gone With The Wind' To Be '76 TV Feature

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Gone With The Wind," the 1939 film classic that has sold more theater admissions than any other motion picture, will be shown on television for the first time in 1976.

NBC-TV is paying $5 million — the highest price ever paid for a single program — for a single showing in 1976, UPI has learned.

The movie has been periodically released by MGM since it opened in Atlanta — the setting of much of the film — in 1939. It was technically renovated in 1967 for large-screen projection.

The standard price paid for networks for two runs of a successful movie is $750,000, though "blockbusters" bring higher prices.

U.S. Senate Hopeful Sets Novato Talk

State Sen. H. L. (Bill) Richardson, R-Arcadia, candidate for the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate, will speak to the Novato Republican Women's Club, Federated, on Tuesday.

The club meets at 11 a.m. at Nave Lanes, Ignacio. The meeting will include a luncheon.

SLA Imitators Face Bank Rap

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Three men and two women were charged yesterday with conspiring to rob a bank while posing as members of the Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA) and kidnaped heiress Patricia Hearst.

The plot, according to authorities, involved dressing one of the women, Patricia Ann Jarvis, 30, to resemble Miss Hearst and arming her with a submachine gun. Police said the group planned to rob the City and County Bank in suburban Concord, Tenn.

Charged with bank robbery conspiracy along with Miss Jarvis were Robert Perry, 20, Michael Hutchinson, Donald Hickey, 32, and Ernest Hendrickson, 28.

Six Students Honored For Career Preparation

Six high school and junior college students were honored twice this week by the Marin County Industry-Education Council, as winners in the council's annual career preparation contest.

The winners were Scott Nickel of Terra Linda High School, judged best in the fine arts field for his studies in pottery; David Angelini of San Rafael High School, industrial arts auto mechanic student; Angie Tescallo, also San Rafael High, in office occupations; Pat Rombelaine, Redwood High School, work experience; Susan Furlong, Tomales High School, home economics, and Anne Kopel, College of Marin, retailing.

R. E. Corrick, chairman of the awards program, reported the winners, parents and teachers they selected as being most helpful to their career plans, were guests of the council at an awards dinner Tuesday. The students also attended the council's annual meeting yesterday, and were introduced.

Cheryl Campbell, Novato High School student on the council's board of directors, also received a special award yesterday for her leadership in the careers program.

Students from all 10 high schools and two junior colleges in Marin competed. They were judged on their career preparedness efforts both in studies and in actual work.

The council installed Ruth Truett of Tiburon as president at the annual meeting, succeeding Macia Greil.

LOSE FAT!

HELPS YOU LOSE THAT EXTRA WEIGHT
■ NO CALORIE COUNTING! ■ NO EXERCISES!
■ NO SPECIAL DIETS!

Thanks to a group of New York doctors, you can now lose pounds of ugly fat without going on any special diet, without cutting out any special foods.

HELPS REDUCE HUNGRY MOMENTS.

These New York doctors discovered a food adjuvant called "MODEL-ETTS."

"Model-etts" does remarkable things. It helps you cut down your caloric intake by a natural automatic curbing of the appetite and of the desire for foods, resulting automatically in a reduced intake of food.

Before "Model-etts" was offered to you, it was tested clinically by the doctors on a large group of non-glandular overweight men and women.

The doctors carefully checked results, and here is what they found:

1. Weight losses of 6 to 20 pounds without any ill effects whatsoever.
2. 96% of the men and women who used "Model-etts" lost weight.

"Model-etts" is absolutely safe. It is a food adjuvant - not a drug.

So, start today to shed those unwanted pounds and inches. If your condition is glandular or organic, see your doctor. "Model-etts" may help you stay on the diet your doctor recommends. Ask him about it.

You can get a full month's supply of "Model-etts" for $3.00 on money back guarantee. In clinical tests, "Model-etts" was 96% successful. "Model-etts" may not be 100% successful in all cases, but you take no risk in trying "Model-etts" on our Money Back Guarantee.

Come to General Nutrition to get "MODEL-ETTS." The sooner you start, the sooner you may have the loss of weight you yearn for.

Sounds too good to be true, but it is true!

How Model-etts Curbs Your Appetite
In the opinion of the supervising physician, based on the average of weight losses in the clinical tests, his calculations showed that 1 Model-etts Wafer has the hunger satisfying capacity of 1 pound boiled potatoes or 4 eggs or 5 slices of white bread, yet it contains only 6 calories.

SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY

A SMILING PUBLISHER — Allan Hanson, publisher of "Bicycling!," holds a copy of the magazine in his San Rafael office. The monthly publication has a press run of more than 110,000.

NATIONAL SOUNDING BOARD

San Rafael-Based Magazine Is Tops In Bicycling World

By PAUL CANE

One of the fastest-growing participant sports in the United States is bicycling, and the best-selling bike periodical in America is published in San Rafael.

"Bicycling!" magazine, with a monthly press run of more than 110,000, is a national sounding board for all segments of the bicycle world, according to publisher Allan M. Hanson of San Rafael.

Hanson, 39, and partner William F. Park took over the faltering magazine approximately 13 months ago, and since then it has tripled in circulation and advertising revenue.

"We bought "Bicycling!" as an investment, but I got so engrossed in publishing it that I'm learning the publishing business in one fell swoop — the hard way," Hanson said. Along with the bike periodical, Hanson's Capital-Management Publications also puts out another magazine, "Dairy Scope."

Hanson formerly was a partner in the Webb and Rogers Pharmacy in San Rafael. He turned to the bike magazine not only because of its money-making possibilities, but also because he thought that bike riders needed to be educated.

"The bicycle is not a toy," he said. "Safety is the name of the game."

GAIL E. HEILMAN
Bicycling! editor

Gail Heilman, 26, of Mill Valley is the person directly responsible for turning out the magazine each month.

She has been with the magazine for two years and attributes its recent success to added coverage of topics of interest to the individual who is just discovering a pleasurable pastime in cycling.

Recent articles have rated the performance of different brands of bicycles and discussed such topics as bike-related legislation, the problems of cyclists in traffic and tips for the neophyte bike buyer.

The magazine began 14 years ago as a Northern California bicycle racing newsletter, but gradually has evolved into a general-interest publication for cyclists of all inclinations.

A recent reader survey revealed that most "Bicycling!" readers are not racers, but persons who use cycles for transportation and recreation.

Nearly a third of all readers have attended graduate school and their median age is 35.

Eighty-six per cent use their bicycles mainly as recreational vehicles, and only 5 per cent are primarily racers.

Because of its national circulation, "Bicycling!" has not become involved in local issues such as Marin bike path construction, but the magazine has a regular monthly column on national legal trends and bike laws. For example, a column in the May issue deals with new proposals to protect bikes from theft, and to trace them if stolen.

Hanson himself is an enthusiastic rider, frequently leaving his car in the garage mornings in favor of biking to his office in the Northgate Industrial Park.

"It's awful, but now that I'm publishing a magazine about bicycling, I really don't have time to do much riding myself," Hanson lamented.

Miss Heilman believes that bicycle paths may be in jeopardy and could lose their current popularity. "For example, the Mill Valley-Sausalito path doesn't look like it has been swept since the day it was built," she said. "If maintenance is neglected like that, use certainly will slacken."

Senate Next For Cut In Bus Fare

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — Legislation to abolish most of Marin County's obligation to pay the Golden Gate Bridge district for local passengers using commuter buses passed the Assembly yesterday by a vote of 62-1.

The measure, AB 3595 by Assemblyman John L. Burton, D-San Francisco, would save the county at least a quarter million dollars a year.

At issue are riders who get on and off transbay buses without leaving the county. Bridge district officials claim current state law requires them to charge the county for the "benefit" of carrying the local passenger on commuter buses. County officials insist the local rider simply provides the bridge district with extra revenue, and that the bus he boards would operate anyway.

The only "no" vote on the lower house floor was by Leo McCarthy, D-San Francisco, a law partner of bridge board president Stephan C. Leonoudakis.

District officials voted Friday to oppose the bill, but have been holding their fire until it reaches the Senate. They are hoping the district's longtime friend, Sen. Randolph Collier, D-Yreka, will kill it in the finance committee, which he chairs.

Burton, as chairman of the powerful rules committee, had no trouble in pushing his bill through the Assembly. It would require the county to pay $85,000 a year for the disputed "benefit," compared to the $351,000 the bridge district wants this year. The county also would have to pay extra to cover inflationary increases in costs.

The bill was proposed by Marin County Supervisor Gary T. Giacomini.

Burton is a candidate for his party's nomination in the Fifth Congressional District and for election to the same seat for the remainder of this year.

Nonsmokers To Dispense Information

The Group Against Smoking Pollution (GASP) will man four information tables in commercial areas throughout Marin from 11:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. tomorrow, according to Marie Dodge, Marin chairman of the national organization.

Tables will be at the Sausalito Pharmacy, 701 Bridgeway, Bon Air shopping center in Greenbrae, Redhill shopping center in San Anselmo and the Northgate shopping mall in San Rafael.

GASP supports the rights of nonsmokers and is not an anti-smoking group, said Mrs. Dodge.

The organization currently is lobbying for state legislation that would require separate areas for non-smokers in restaurants, theaters, hospitals and in public buildings and public transportation.

Further information may be obtained by contacting GASP, Box 601, Larkspur.

Candidates' Night Set In Novato

Candidates for the Fifth District supervisorial seat and the Novato Sanitary District board have been invited to appear at a candidates' night at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Marin School, Novato.

Candidates for the supervisorial post, incumbent Arnold M. Baptiste and Berry Machado are scheduled to speak at 8:30 p.m.

Candidates for the Novato Sanitary District board are incumbents, Thomas D. Hardcastle and Clayton D. Payne, Francis A. Butler, Barbara J. Butner, Raymond E. Gilbert, Miguel B. Medeiros, George C. Quesada and Robert L. Sunderland.

The meeting is sponsored by the Novato branch, American Association of University Women, the North Marin Federation of Homeowners and the League of Women Voters of Central Marin.

Irrigation

The first record of irrigation in the Pacific Northwest dates back to 1836 when Marcus Whitman diverted water from Mill Creek near Walla Walla, Wash., to irrigate his vegetable garden.

New Report Deadline Coming Up

Four of the five congressional candidates who failed to file reports on their campaign expenditures, as reported Wednesday by the Independent-Journal, did not have to make the reports.

The four did not form campaign committees by March 1, the cutoff for the first report due under federal law. All seven, however, will have to file reports by Monday to meet another of several deadlines.

Those who did not have to file were Republicans Thomas O. Caylor, Sean McCarthy and Jean M. Wall and Democrat Terrence V. McGuire. The fifth, Alan D. French, was supposed to file because his campaign started early, but failed to do so.

Reports were filed by Democrats Alan F. Reeves and Assemblyman John L. Burton of San Francisco. All seven are seeking their party's nomination in the Fifth District and are running also for election to the same seat for the remainder of this year.

Delivery Of Ferries Delayed Four Months

The firm manufacturing the Golden Gate Bridge District's three new ferries yesterday said it will take four months longer than expected to complete the first vessel.

Campbell Industries of San Diego, building the ferries under a $12 million contract, said the delay was caused by a change in electrical systems necessitated when a generator to be used was withdrawn from the market.

If the bridge district approves the delay, the first ferry will arrive Oct. 1.

The district's ferry transit manager, Stanley M. Kowleski, said he will recommend that district directors grant the extension.

Delays also were asked for delivery of the second and third vessels, with the second to arrive Dec. 1, or two months late, and the third by March 1, one month late.

Kowleski acknowledged that some delay was academic anyway since even temporary docking facilities for the new ferries are still only on paper. A landing in San Francisco could be ready in about six weeks, he estimated.

The district still hopes to have one in Sausalito by October, but has been held up by Sausalito's opposition to service by a larger ferry.

The Corte Larkspur terminal will not be ready for use until next May, according to latest estimates, Kowleski said.

Men's Clothing Firm Is Given City Hall Lease

The Sausalito City Council has agreed to lease city hall to Tops and Trowsers, a men's clothing firm.

Councilmen on Wednesday chose the clothing store over an- other lease applicant, the Quest art gallery.

The council also approved Tops and Trowser's plan to refurbish the building on a Victorian theme, according to Planning Director Herb Case.

Terms of the lease have not been made final, but the men's store has proposed a 15-year lease at $25,000 per year plus 5 per cent of gross sales over $25,000.

The city is preparing to move its offices from Bridgeway to Central School on Caledonia Street.

A SMILING PUBLISHER — Allan Hanson, publisher of "Bicycling!," holds a copy of the magazine in his San Rafael office. The monthly publication has a press run of more than 110,000.

NATIONAL SOUNDING BOARD

San Rafael-Based Magazine Is Tops In Bicycling World

By PAUL CANE

One of the fastest-growing participant sports in the United States is bicycling, and the best-selling bike periodical in America is published in San Rafael.

"Bicycling!" magazine, with a monthly press run of more than 110,000, is a national sounding board for all segments of the bicycle world, according to publisher Allan M. Hanson of San Rafael.

Hanson, 39, and partner William F. Park took over the faltering magazine approximately 13 months ago, and since then it has tripled in circulation and advertising revenue.

"We bought "Bicycling!" as an investment, but I got so engrossed in publishing it that I'm learning the publishing business in one fell swoop — the hard way," Hanson said. Along with the bike periodical, Hanson's Capital-Management Publications also puts out another magazine, "Dairy Scope."

Hanson formerly was a partner in the Webb and Rogers Pharmacy in San Rafael. He turned to the bike magazine not only because of its money-making possibilities, but also because he thought that bike riders needed to be educated.

"The bicycle is not a toy," he said. "Safety is the name of the game."

Gail Heilman, 26, of Mill Valley is the person directly responsible for turning out the magazine each month.

She has been with the magazine for two years and attributes its recent success to added coverage of topics of interest to the individual who is just discovering a pleasurable pastime in cycling.

Recent articles have rated the performance of different brands of bicycles and discussed such topics as bike-related legislation, the problems of cyclists in traffic and tips for the neophyte bike buyer.

The magazine began 14 years ago as a Northern California bicycle racing newsletter, but gradually has evolved into a general-interest publication for cyclists of all inclinations.

GAIL E. HEILMAN
Bicycling! editor

A recent reader survey revealed that most "Bicycling!" readers are not racers, but persons who use cycles for transportation and recreation.

Nearly a third of all readers have attended graduate school and their median age is 35.

Eighty-six per cent use their bicycles mainly as recreational vehicles, and only 5 per cent are primarily racers.

Because of its national circulation, "Bicycling!" has not become involved in local issues such as Marin bike path construction, but the magazine has a regular monthly column on national legal trends and bike laws. For example, a column in the May issue deals with new proposals to protect bikes from theft, and to trace them if stolen.

Hanson himself is an enthusiastic rider, frequently leaving his car in the garage mornings in favor of biking to his office in the Northgate Industrial Park.

"It's awful, but now that I'm publishing a magazine about bicycling, I really don't have time to do much riding myself," Hanson lamented.

Miss Heilman believes that bicycle paths may be in jeopardy and could lose their current popularity. "For example, the Mill Valley-Sausalito path doesn't look like it has been swept since the day it was built," she said. "If maintenance is neglected like that, use certainly will slacken."

Senate Next For Cut In Bus Fare

I-J Special Report

SACRAMENTO — Legislation to abolish most of Marin County's obligation to pay the Golden Gate Bridge district for local passengers using commuter buses passed the Assembly yesterday by a vote of 62-1.

The measure, AB 3595 by Assemblyman John L. Burton, D-San Francisco, would save the county at least a quarter million dollars a year.

At issue are riders who get on and off transbay buses without leaving the county. Bridge district officials claim current state law requires them to charge the county for the "benefit" of carrying the local passenger on commuter buses. County officials insist the local rider simply provides the bridge district with extra revenue, and that the bus he boards would operate anyway.

The only "no" vote on the lower house floor was by Leo McCarthy, D-San Francisco, a law partner of bridge board president Stephan C. Leonoudakis.

District officials voted Friday to oppose the bill, but have been holding their fire until it reaches the Senate. They are hoping the district's longtime friend, Sen. Randolph Collier, D-Yreka, will kill it in the finance committee, which he chairs.

Burton, as chairman of the powerful rules committee, had no trouble in pushing his bill through the Assembly. It would require the county to pay $85,000 a year for the disputed "benefit," compared to the $351,000 the bridge district wants this year. The county also would have to pay extra to cover inflationary increases in costs.

The bill was proposed by Marin County Supervisor Gary T. Giacomini.

Burton is a candidate for his party's nomination in the Fifth Congressional District and for election to the same seat for the remainder of this year.

Nonsmokers To Dispense Information

The Group Against Smoking Pollution (GASP) will man four information tables in commercial areas throughout Marin from 11:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. tomorrow, according to Marie Dodge, Marin chairman of the national organization.

Tables will be at the Sausalito Pharmacy, 701 Bridgeway, Bon Air shopping center in Greenbrae, Redhill shopping center in San Anselmo and the Northgate shopping mall in San Rafael.

GASP supports the rights of nonsmokers and is not an anti-smoking group, said Mrs. Dodge.

The organization currently is lobbying for state legislation that would require separate areas for non-smokers in restaurants, theaters, hospitals and in public buildings and public transportation.

Further information may be obtained by contacting GASP, Box 601, Larkspur.

Candidates' Night Set In Novato

Candidates for the Fifth District supervisorial seat and the Novato Sanitary District board have been invited to appear at a candidates' night at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Marin School, Novato.

Candidates for the supervisorial post, incumbent Arnold M. Baptiste and Berry Machado are scheduled to speak at 8:30 p.m.

Candidates for the Novato Sanitary District board are incumbents, Thomas D. Hardcastle and Clayton D. Payne, Francis A. Butler, Barbara J. Butner, Raymond E. Gilbert, Miguel B. Medeiros, George C. Quesada and Robert L. Sunderland.

The meeting is sponsored by the Novato branch, American Association of University Women, the North Marin Federation of Homeowners and the League of Women Voters of Central Marin.

Irrigation

The first record of irrigation in the Pacific Northwest dates back to 1836 when Marcus Whitman diverted water from Mill Creek near Walla Walla, Wash., to irrigate his vegetable garden.

New Report Deadline Coming Up

Four of the five congressional candidates who failed to file reports on their campaign expenditures, as reported Wednesday by the Independent-Journal, did not have to make the reports.

The four did not form campaign committees by March 1, the cutoff for the first report due under federal law. All seven, however, will have to file reports by Monday to meet another of several deadlines.

Those who did not have to file were Republicans Thomas O. Caylor, Sean McCarthy and Jean M. Wall and Democrat Terrence V. McGuire. The fifth, Alan D. French, was supposed to file because his campaign started early, but failed to do so.

Reports were filed by Democrats Alan F. Reeves and Assemblyman John L. Burton of San Francisco. All seven are seeking their party's nomination in the Fifth District and are running also for election to the same seat for the remainder of this year.

1964 Drake Class Will Hold Reunion

The Sir Francis Drake High School class of 1964 will hold a 10-year reunion June 15 at the San Rafael Elks Club.

Registration deadline is June 1 and graduates should write to the Drake Reunion Committee, P.O. Box 83, Novato to make reservations.

Delivery Of Ferries Delayed Four Months

The firm manufacturing the Golden Gate Bridge District's three new ferries yesterday said it will take four months longer than expected to complete the first vessel.

Campbell Industries of San Diego, building the ferries under a $12 million contract, said the delay was caused by a change in electrical systems necessitated when a generator to be used was withdrawn from the market.

If the bridge district approves the delay, the first ferry will arrive Oct. 1.

The district's ferry transit manager, Stanley M. Kowleski, said he will recommend that district directors grant the extension.

Delays also were asked for delivery of the second and third vessels, with the second to arrive Dec. 1, or two months late, and the third by March 1, one month late.

Kowleski acknowledged that some delay was academic anyway since even temporary docking facilities for the new ferries are still only on paper. A landing in San Francisco could be ready in about six weeks, he estimated.

The district still hopes to have one in Sausalito by October, but has been held up by Sausalito's opposition to service by a larger ferry.

The Corte Larkspur terminal will not be ready for use until next May, according to latest estimates, Kowleski said.

Men's Clothing Firm Is Given City Hall Lease

The Sausalito City Council has agreed to lease city hall to Tops and Trowsers, a men's clothing firm.

Councilmen on Wednesday chose the clothing store over an- other lease applicant, the Quest art gallery.

The council also approved Tops and Trowser's plan to refurbish the building on a Victorian theme, according to Planning Director Herb Case.

Terms of the lease have not been made final, but the men's store has proposed a 15-year lease at $25,000 per year plus 5 per cent of gross sales over $25,000.

The city is preparing to move its offices from Bridgeway to Central School on Caledonia Street.

Safety Seminar For Pilots Set

A Federal Aviation Administration safety seminar for Marin pilots will be held by Marin Aviation at 7:30 p.m. today in its hangar at Gnoss Field north of Novato.

Representatives from Hamilton Air Force Base will discuss changes in air traffic control and safety experts will review cross-wind landings, density altitude and the new requiremnt for a biennial flight review.

Coffee and cookies will be served.

SALESMAN WANTED

A week ago Sunday a couple "dropped in." It was quiet. The street was empty. They had no want ads in their hand. No appointment. They ended up paying $122,000 cash for a house. The next day at our sales meeting we all decided to start taking better care of our "drop ins." We get a lot of them here at our San Rafael office. Cor. of 4th & Irwin St., just off the freeway. SALESMAN WANTED.

SALESMAN WANTED

A week ago Sunday a couple "dropped in." It was quiet. The street was empty. They had no want ads in their hand. No appointment. They ended up paying $122,000 cash for a house. The next day at our sales meeting we all decided to start taking better care of our "drop ins." We get a lot of them here at our San Rafael office. Cor. of 4th & Irwin St., just off the freeway. SALESMAN WANTED.

LEGAL NOTICE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Marin County Planning Commission will hold a public hearing to consider the Commission's amendments to Title 22 (Zoning) of the Marin County Code, which amendments would reclassify, separably and independently, the following properties in the Upper Ross Valley area, including properties all or partially designated as Ridge and Upland Greenbelt Open Space in the Marin Countywide Plan.

As described in the Planning Commission's adopted policies for rezoning open space area designated in the Marin Countywide Plan, the purpose of the proposed rezoning is to apply very low densities, to protect the open space character of the areas, and to achieve consistency with the plan's policies. In most cases, a very low density, RMP (Residential, Multiple Planned District), will be recommended because it allows maximum flexibility in building placement and allows either detached or attached units. The Commission will consider rezoning to either a higher or lower density, according to the specific characteristics of the site, at the time development plans are presented. The possibility of provision of low, moderate, or middle-income housing will be one of the considerations to be applied to the decision concerning density at the time of the review of the development.

The following parcels are included in this proposal:

a) From A-2 (Limited Agricultural District):
174,060,06,07,08,09,10,15,24
174-070-34,36
176-300-15,49

b) From A-2:B-4 (Limited Agricultural District, one acre building site): 174-050-02,08,09,23,26,28,32,33,34,35,44,50,62,64,77

c) From A-2:B-D (Limited Agricultural District, Sleepy Hollow area):
176-260-02,07,08,19,23,25,27,31,32,34,35,36

d) From R-1:B-D (Single-family Residence District, Sleepy Hollow area):
176-270-05,06
177-041-05
177-071-09

e) From R-1:B-3 (Single-family Residence District, 20,000 sq. ft. building site):
174-050-59
197-090-01,03,04,05,06,07,09,10,11,12,13

f) From RSP-0.25 (Residential, Single-family Planned District, one unit per 4 acres):
197-100-11,15

To RMP- (Residential, Multiple Planned District, Density to be determined by the Planning Commission) or O-A (Open Area District).

NOTICE IS HEREBY FURTHER GIVEN that said hearing will be held during the regular meeting of the Marin County Planning Commission on Monday, June 10, 1974, in the Planning Commission Hearing Room, Civic Center, San Rafael, California, which meeting commences at 9:00 a.m. Those wishing to attend said hearing may call the Planning Department at 479-1100, Extension 2526 on Friday, June 7, 1974, in order to be informed of the place on the agenda and the approximate time of the hearing.

LEGAL NOTICE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Marin County Planning Commission will hold a public hearing to consider the Commission's amendments to Title 22 (Zoning) of the Marin County Code, which amendments would reclassify, separably and independently, the following properties in the Upper Ross Valley area, including properties all or partially designated as Ridge and Upland Greenbelt Open Space in the Marin Countywide Plan.

As described in the Planning Commission's adopted policies for rezoning open space area designated in the Marin Countywide Plan, the purpose of the proposed rezoning is to apply very low densities, to protect the open space character of the areas, and to achieve consistency with the plan's policies. In most cases, a very low density, RMP (Residential, Multiple Planned District), will be recommended because it allows maximum flexibility in building placement and allows either detached or attached units. The Commission will consider rezoning to either a higher or lower density, according to the specific characteristics of the site, at the time development plans are presented. The possibility of provision of low, moderate, or middle-income housing will be one of the considerations to be applied to the decision concerning density at the time of the review of the development.

The following parcels are included in this proposal:

a) From A-2 (Limited Agricultural District):
174,060,06,07,08,09,10,15,24
174-070-34,36
176-300-15,49

176-260-02,07,08,19,23,25,27,31,32,34,35,36

d) From R-1:B-D (Single-family Residence District, Sleepy Hollow area):
176-270-05,06
177-041-05
177-071-09

e) From R-1:B-3 (Single-family Residence District, 20,000 sq. ft. building site):

f) From RSP-0.25 (Residential, Single-family Planned District, one unit per 4 acres):
197-100-11,15

To RMP- (Residential, Multiple Planned District, Density to be determined by the Planning Commission) or O-A (Open Area District).

NOTICE IS HEREBY FURTHER GIVEN that said hearing will be held during the regular meeting of the Marin County Planning Commission on Monday, June 10, 1974, in the Planning Commission Hearing Room, Civic Center, San Rafael, California, which meeting commences at 9:00 a.m. Those wishing to attend said hearing may call the Planning Department at 479-1100, Extension 2526 on Friday, June 7, 1974, in order to be informed of the place on the agenda and the approximate time of the hearing.

Layoff Scare Seen Hurting Education

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Projected enrollment drops and threatened layoffs have caused "serious anxieties" among California State University and College professors, a professor's group said yesterday.

Arnold Mechanic, president of the United Professors of California, Oakland, said in a telephone interview that "layoff scare talk" on the university and college system's 19 campuses is hurting education in general.

In an attempt to reassure professors of continued employment, UPC has been working closely with Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti, D-Van Nuys, and Ways and Means chairman Willie Brown, D-San Francisco, to come up with "appropriate control language" in the 1974-75 Budget Act.

Mechanic said talk of layoffs was prevalent at the Hayward and Northridge campuses, but he added that professors and instructors throughout the system were "concerned with the possibility."

A report by legislative Analyst A. Aian Post showed a projected decrease in the number of budgeted full-time students for the 1974-75 school year. The decrease from 226,560 to 226,525 was the first projected since the system was consolidated in 1960.

Mechanic said his group is trying to get language in the budget act to make sure that no new employees would be hired until funds are first provided for the existing full-time faculty.

It would also propose that individual campuses could transfer funds across budget categories to avoid layoffs.

"Professors on many campuses are suffering serious anxieties because of possible layoffs," Mechanic said. "People don't operate as effectively when they have anxieties about where they are going to be a year from now."

Mechanic said there are about 13,000 full-time teaching positions in the system.

The 1974-75 budget proposes a reduction of 17.2 faculty positions from the 1973-74 level, the first possible faculty loss ever generated by declining enrollment.

Professors throughout the system, according to Mechanic, feel that the declining enrollment should be handled in a "humane way" without any loss of jobs.

Hughes Is Sued For Back Rent

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Howard Hughes has been named in a $6 million court action which charges he was behind a year in his rent at the Silver Slipper Casino and should be evicted.

The suit filed yesterday in district court seeks $1 million in real damages, $5 million in punitive damages, and return of the property to its owners.

Hughes leased the Silver Slipper Casino April 30, 1968, from the group for $32,000 a month and has not paid the rent since May, 1973, according to the suit.

More Soccer For Marin

There will be more age group soccer in Marin County this year.

It will be the Junior Soccer League of Marin, part of the California Youth Soccer Association, and will involve more than 250 boys from throughout the county, according to Ed Wright, chairman of the new league.

Play will be very competitive. It will be more like Little League baseball and Pop Warner football — highly organized kids' sports. Too highly organized.

"SURE, WE will stress winning," said Wright, "but we're insisting they know how to lose graciously."

There is also in Marin County the Marin Youth Soccer Association which will involve between 800 and 1,000 kids this year. Centered around Ross, Kentfield and Greenbrae, the Marin Youth Soccer League is expanding to cover Terra Linda and Tiburon. The philosophy of this league is to involve as many youngsters as possible. All kids who go out make the team. Everybody plays.

Wright is expecting at least 20 teams for the first year of the league. So far there are four from Mill Valley, one from Corte Madera, two from San Rafael, six from Terra Linda, four from Marinwood and three from Novato. The age groups are 10, 12 and 14.

SOCCER IS one of the fastest growing sports for youngsters in this country. It has always been big in other nations but was slow to get off the ground here. Most of the coaches in the Junior Soccer League of Marin are from foreign countries and some of them have pro experience.

According to Wright's figures, there are 17,000 boys in the Bay Area involved in the California Youth Soccer Association which has been growing in leaps and bounds.

His 250 youngsters are just a start, he says. "I'm expecting phenomenal growth in this league."

THE TEAMS in the new Marin league will have 14 or 15 members each, and every player will get a chance to play at least one half of every game. The top players will be playing the entire game, but it means the less talented won't waste all their time collecting splinters on the bench as spectators. The more things like this in kids sports the better.

Teams will be forming until the June 30 deadline for entries and the league will start sometime in September. Many of the league's coaches had teams last year, but there was no organized schedule making or such.

"WE HAD TO scrounge around from week to week to get games but that's all ended now," said Wright. "Come September, there will be a regular schedule of games. We expect to have 12 league games and cup competition." In cup competition teams are picked by draw rather than final standings, and they play a single elimination tourney. Games will be played on school fields.

Wright is a 42-year-old mechanic who owns his own shop, Ed Wright's British Repair, in San Rafael. He's from Birmingham, England. Wright lived in New Zealand for two years before coming to the United States in 1958. He played professional soccer in Birmingham and coached six and seventh grade teams in New Zealand.

Reds End Rose's Brief Fling With Newspaper

CINCINNATI (UPI) — The Cincinnati Reds have ended Pete Rose's brief fling into the newspaper world.

Reds president Bob Howsam has told Rose to remove his name from the masthead of a weekly baseball newspaper and to stop writing a column in the paper. Rose, the Reds' left fielder and last year's most valuable player in the National League, has agreed to comply.

Reuben Katz, a lawyer who handles some of Rose's business affairs, said he talked to Rose yesterday.

"Pete told me he plans to go along with the club and disassociate himself with the paper because winning is the most important thing to him," Katz reported. "Rose said if the ball club doesn't want him connected with the paper, he won't be.

The newspaper in question is called "Pete Rose's Reds Alert," in existence about two months. The paper sells for 50 cents and has a circulation of about 25,000.

Howsam complained about articles in the paper that "ridiculed and unfairly criticized various members of the Cincinnati team."

"The Cincinnati Reds do not believe that it is right for a publication that is known as Pete Rose's newspaper to attack Rose's teammates, even though Pete has not personally authored such articles," said Howsam.

Howsam became angered when the paper carried an article critical of Reds utility infielder Darrel Chaney. The article was not in Rose's column but was written by Bill Mathews, president of the paper.

Flyers' Champagne Must Wait Following Setback

BOSTON (UPI) — The Philadelphia Flyers had the champagne on ice last night but the Boston Bruins burst their bubble, sending the bottles and the Broad Street Bullies back home for at least one more game.

Boston, reverting to the "Big Bad Bruins" style of several years ago, "outmuscled, outskated and outhustled" the Flyers in Coach Bep Guidolin's words, to win 5-1. Philadelphia leads three games to two in the best-of-seven Stanley Cup finals.

Bobby Orr and Gregg Sheppard carried scoring honors.

Orr had two goals and an assist and Sheppard a goal and two assists. In between the scoring, the teams amassed a playoff record of 43 penalties that included six fights, and assorted roughing, high sticking, slashing, kneeing and buttending calls. A total of 138 minutes in penalties was handed out.

Heading the hitting parade was Philly Bad Boy Dave Schultz, who engaged in one fight each period and ran up 22 minutes in penalties.

Boston, which had allowed Philadelphia to play aggressive hockey for the first four games, began forechecking and controlling play in game No. 5. And Orr ran the controls, starting plays, whipping back on defense and finishing offensive thrusts. He and Sheppard got Boston winging at 8:14 of the first period after Sheppard had used the boards to go around the Flyers in the Philadelphia end.

The swift-skating pair passed back and forth twice until Orr took a shot in close that Bernie Parent stopped. But Sheppard flipped in the rebound.

The Flyers got their only goal 6:04 into the second period on Bill Clement's tap-in after the puck got behind Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert on a save of a Bill Flett shot.

But Orr and Sheppard combined again six minutes later, with Orr pumping home a Sheppard rebound from 10 feet. Orr gunned a 40-footer 4:49 later that sealed the match. Ken Hodge and Don Marcotte added third-period goals, with Sheppard picking up an assist on Hodge's deflection.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Bold Ruler has been dead almost three years, but the great sire remains a dominant figure in the Preakness Stakes, a race he won at Pimlico in 1957.

They include Cannonade, the Kentucky Derby winner who is the favorite in the 1 3-16 mile Preakness, and three of the 22 horses who trailed him at Churchill Downs — Destroyer, Buck's Bid and Rube the Great.

Cannonade and Buck's Bid both were sired by Bold Bidder, Destroyer by Vitriolic, and Rube the Great by Bold Lad.

A's Skipper Fumes After Wet Defeat

CHICAGO (AP) — It all depends on which side of the score you're on when a game is finally called because of rain.

"We could have played the last 45 minutes," said manager Alvin Dark of the Oakland A's after the rain had washed out a 4-4 tie and the game reverted to seven innings giving the Chicago White Sox a 4-3 victory.

"They waited long enough," said manager Chuck Tanner of the White Sox. "The outfield was a quagmire and in addition to a continuous rain there was the lightning."

The White Sox had a 4-3 lead going into the top of the eighth when Angel Mangual opened with a single and pinch runner Herb Washington promptly stole second base. Galen Pitts then singled to left sending Washington home with the tying run just as a shower hit.

Play was halted and the umpires waited one hour and 26 minutes before finally calling the contest.

"They were waiting just to make it look good," said Dark. "That's an artificial turf in the infield and they didn't even bother to look at it. I can understand it if the score were lopsided but here we have two teams fighting for the league lead."

Tanner accepted the victory happily but admitted he doesn't like the rainout rule.

The circumstances enabled Wilbur Wood to post his first victory over the A's since September of 1972 after seven straight losses but Wood, boosting his record to 6-5, was gone long before the rain hit.

Ken Holtzman started for the A's and was the loser as his record dipped to 3-5. He was yanked in the third inning when the Sox scored a pair on Bradford's homer and a run-scoring single by Bill Melton to take a 3-2 lead.

Bonds Sure He Has Solved Batting Woes

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — All the San Francisco Giants have to do is to play as well as they're talking these days and they'll give the Los Angeles Dodgers a real run for their money in the Western Division.

San Francisco, idle yesterday, hosts San Diego in the opener of a three-game set, which means the return of Willie McCovey to Candlestick Park.

Slump-ridden Bobby Bonds of the Giants, hitting .222 when all observers agree he should be about 100 points higher, returns to the lineup tonight after virtually a two-game layoff.

It was the first time in his career he was benched for reasons other than injury.

Bonds swears he has figured out what he has been doing wrong at the plate and was only half-kidding when he promised to get three hits tonight. He said that after he broke out of his slump, he would disclose the secret. He said the flaw was pointed out to him by a friend who saw it while watching him on tv.

Then there is Tito Fuentes, who has been battling back pains all season. Fuentes had announced in New York that he was considering submitting to a drug injection in the area of the injured spinal disc when the club returned to San Francisco.

Enroute home after the series in Cincinnati, the Giants second sacker reported that he felt so good he would at least temporarily shelve the injection move.

Bogert, Perry Lead Clobber Softballers

Bob Bogert hit a home run and triple to back up Ron Perry's one-hitter as Clobber, Inc. whipped First American Title, 7-1, in San Rafael Recreation Department adult softball league play last night at Albert Field.

Dave and Dan Olbrantz scored five runs in the other game to boost the Marin Suns over the SMB Fliers, 6-4.

More Soccer For Marin

There will be more age group soccer in Marin County this year.

It will be the Junior Soccer League of Marin, part of the California Youth Soccer Association, and will involve more than 250 boys from throughout the county, according to Ed Wright, chairman of the new league.

Play will be very competitive. It will be more like Little League baseball and Pop Warner football — highly organized kids' sports. Too highly organized.

"SURE, WE will stress winning," said Wright, "but we're insisting they know how to lose graciously."

There is also in Marin County the Marin Youth Soccer Association which will involve between 800 and 1,000 kids this year. Centered around Ross, Kentfield and Greenbrae, the Marin Youth Soccer League is expanding to cover Terra Linda and Tiburon. The philosophy of this league is to involve as many youngsters as possible. All kids who go out make the team. Everybody plays.

Wright is expecting at least 20 teams for the first year of the league. So far there are four from Mill Valley, one from Corte Madera, two from San Rafael, six from Terra Linda, four from Marinwood and three from Novato. The age groups are 10, 12 and 14.

SOCCER IS one of the fastest growing sports for youngsters in this country. It has always been big in other nations but was slow to get off the ground here. Most of the coaches in the Junior Soccer League of Marin are from foreign countries and some of them have pro experience.

According to Wright's figures, there are 17,000 boys in the Bay Area involved in the California Youth Soccer Association which has been growing in leaps and bounds.

His 250 youngsters are just a start, he says. "I'm expecting phenomenal growth in this league."

THE TEAMS in the new Marin league will have 14 or 15 members each, and every player will get a chance to play at least one half of every game. The top players will be playing the entire game, but it means the less talented won't waste all their time collecting splinters on the bench as spectators. The more things like this in kids sports the better.

Teams will be forming until the June 30 deadline for entries and the league will start sometime in September. Many of the league's coaches had teams last year, but there was no organized schedule making or such.

"WE HAD TO scrounge around from week to week to get games but that's all ended now," said Wright. "Come September, there will be a regular schedule of games. We expect to have 12 league games and cup competition." In cup competition teams are picked by draw rather than final standings, and they play a single elimination tourney. Games will be played on school fields.

Wright is a 42-year-old mechanic who owns his own shop, Ed Wright's British Repair, in San Rafael. He's from Birmingham, England. Wright lived in New Zealand for two years before coming to the United States in 1958. He played professional soccer in Birmingham and coached six and seventh grade teams in New Zealand.

Reds End Rose's Brief Fling With Newspaper

CINCINNATI (UPI) — The Cincinnati Reds have ended Pete Rose's brief fling into the newspaper world.

Reds president Bob Howsam has told Rose to remove his name from the masthead of a weekly baseball newspaper and to stop writing a column in the paper. Rose, the Reds' left fielder and last year's most valuable player in the National League, has agreed to comply.

Reuben Katz, a lawyer who handles some of Rose's business affairs, said he talked to Rose yesterday.

"Pete told me he plans to go along with the club and disassociate himself with the paper because winning is the most important thing to him," Katz reported. "Rose said if the ball club doesn't want him connected with the paper, he won't be.

The newspaper in question is called "Pete Rose's Reds Alert," in existence about two months. The paper sells for 50 cents and has a circulation of about 25,000.

Howsam complained about articles in the paper that "ridiculed and unfairly criticized various members of the Cincinnati team."

"The Cincinnati Reds do not believe that it is right for a publication that is known as Pete Rose's newspaper to attack Rose's teammates, even though Pete has not personally authored such articles," said Howsam.

Howsam became angered when the paper carried an article critical of Reds utility infielder Darrel Chaney. The article was not in Rose's column but was written by Bill Matthews, president of the paper.

Portland Woos Ben Davidson

Combined AP & UPI

PORTLAND, Ore. — Two veteran National Football League defensive linemen — Ben Davidson of Oakland and Tom Keating, a former Raider now with Pittsburgh — were here this week to talk with officials of the World Football League's Portland Storms.

"We are serious about the World Football League," said Davidson. "This is an excellent alternative for anyone in the NFL. We certainly are serious. That's why we stopped here."

Davidson, who will play in tomorrow's alumni-varsity spring game at his alma mater, Washington, and Keating arrived together on their motorcycles. Davidson, complying with Oregon law that motorcyclists wear a helmet, had on his Raider's helmet.

Davidson, 33, has a year remaining on his contract and would be able to play for Portland in 1976, while Keating, 31, could play in 1975 as he is in his option year.

SAN GERONIMO National Golf Club women's champion Nancy Gapinski has found new fields to conquer.

Mrs. Gapinski won the North Bay Women's Championship by one stroke. She prevailed over 100 golfers competing May 6, 8, and 10 at Rohnert Park Municipal, Indian Valley and Kennedy Park (Napa). Her three day score was 82-82-77 — 241.

CORRECTION. In last Friday's column item discussing the lengthening of the Peacock Gap Course, the layout figures reported were erroneous. The listed figures were 4,011 yards and 4,200. The correct figure for current layout is 6,011, and it will be expanded to 6,200.

Phils' Hutton: 'I'm Ready'

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Tommy Hutton thinks he'll be ready for a rest — along about late October.

"They say I can't play every day but I played every day in the minors — look up my averages," the Philadelphia Phils' reserve first baseman says.

The record books shows he hit .328 and .352 in Spokane in 1970 and 1971 but he hasn't been able to break into the Phils' regular lineup.

"I'm ready. How can I be tired? I've been resting for three years. I can rest after the World Series in October."

Hutton got a chance to play last night for the second straight game because Willie Montanez has a sore wrist and he drove in five runs with two homers and a single to pace the Philadelphia Phils to a 6-3 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Hutton, now 28, was picked up by the Phils after the 1971 season in a deal with Los Angeles for Larry Hisle. He batted 381 and 247 times the last two years for the Phils while hitting .260 and .263.

The five RBIs were a career high in a single game for Hutton. He singled in the first run in the first inning after Del Unser doubled. He hit a three-run homer in the third after singles by Unser and Greg Luzinski off loser Mike Torrez and added another homer in the fifth off reliever John Montague.

In the other National League games, New York downed St. Louis 6-4, Pittsburgh topped Chicago 5-2 and Atlanta routed San Diego 11-1. In the American League, Kansas City edged Texas 5-3 and Chicago edged Oakland 4-3.

Braves 11, Padres 1

Marty Perez drove in six runs, three of them in the second inning with his second homer of the year, and Dave Johnson added a pair of home runs to give the Braves the easy win over San Diego.

Pirates 5, Cubs 2

Ken Brett and Bruce Kison combined on a nine-hitter and Brett also drove in two runs to pace the Pirates over the Cubs.

Royals 5, Rangers 3

John Mayberry's two-run, 450-foot homer led Kansas City over Texas.

Mets 6, Cards 4

Ted Martinez' two-run doubled capped a four-run fifth inning that carried the Mets over the Cards.

Tennis Champ Redwood Wins

Redwood High School completed its seventh straight championship tennis season yesterday with a 7-0 Marin County Athletic League victory over Marin Catholic. Redwood ended the season with a 13-1 record.

Terra Linda coach Chris Ahern and Tam coach Joel Calpin refused to tell the outcome of their match, citing their objections the Independent-Journal's reduced coverage.

RESULTS

Redwood 7, Marin Catholic 0, at Collage of Marin. First singles — Henry Jacobson (R) d. Frank Casella, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Drake 5, San Rafael 2, at San Rafael Gene Lachelt (D) d. Mark Sabella, 6-1, 6-1

San Marin d. Novato, forfeit.

Final Practice For Indy Racers

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — Indianapolis "500" hopefuls were down to the nitty gritty today—the last full day of practice before tomorrow's scheduled final round of time trials for the May 26 race.

Time trials this year were trimmed from four to two days in the name of energy conservation, and only bad weather could force extension of the qualifying time to Sunday. Practice time also was shortened by a week this year.

There was a 30 per cent chance of rain Saturday, indicating that there probably will be enough dry time to fill the remaining 18 spots open in the 33-car field.

Thus, it boiled down to a now-or-never situation for the unqualified cars, crews and drivers.

Three former "500" champions ran speeds in practice yesterday which should easily get them into the lineup.

Al Unser, Albuquerque, N.M., a two-time winner here, had the day's top speed of 187.617 miles per hour despite windy weather.

Mario Andretti, Nazareth, Pa., another ex-winner, had a lap of 184.577, and defending champion Gordon Johncock, Phoenix, Ariz., was clocked at 184.949.

The only other driver over 180 Thursday was Dick Simon, Salt Lake City, with a 183.374 top speed.

More than a dozen cars had been above 180 on Wednesday when racing weather was much better.

Eleven cars still have a chance at the pole position tentatively held now by three-time "500" king A.J. Foyt, Houston, Tex. These 11 machines didn't get a chance to run last Saturday.

One of the cars slated for practice today is the machine wrecked last Friday by Denny Zimmerman, Glastonbury, Conn. Zimmerman's crew reported Thursday it had completed extensive repairs to the racer.

Larry McCoy, a rookie from Langhorne, Pa., escaped injury yesterday when his car spun twice in the No. 2 turn. The machine did not hit the wall and was not damaged.

HORSES

gelding who has won two consecutive grass races at Pimlico including a division of the Woodlawn Stakes. Heir to the Line, winner of last Saturday's Preakness Prep, is by the Bold Ruler mare Borderline.

In addition to the starters with Bold Ruler connections, other Preakness entries include Derby runner-up Hudson County; J.R.'s Pet, No. 4 finisher at Churchill Downs, and Little Current, the fifth-place finisher.

Rounding out the 13-horse field, which was two shy of the maximum which could be handled at Pimlico without running two divisions, are Jolly Johu, All Game, Kin Run, and Silver Florin, who was made a supplementary entry for $10,000 after failing to be nominated for $100 by his owners.

Television coverage by KPIX Channel 5 locally is scheduled for 2 p.m.-3 p.m. PDT.

Portland Woos Ben Davidson

Combined AP & UPI

PORTLAND, Ore. — Two veteran National Football League defensive linemen — Ben Davidson of Oakland and Tom Keating, a former Raider now with Pittsburgh — were here this week to talk with officials of the World Football League's Portland Storms.

"We are serious about the World Football League," said Davidson. "This is an excellent alternative for anyone in the NFL. We certainly are serious. That's why we stopped here."

Davidson, who will play in tomorrow's alumni-varsity spring game at his alma mater, Washington, and Keating arrived together on their motorcycles. Davidson, complying with Oregon law that motorcyclists wear a helmet, had on his Raider's helmet.

Davidson, 33, has a year remaining on his contract and would be able to play for Portland in 1976, while Keating, 31, could play in 1975 as he is in his option year.

GOLF NOTES

Leach Celebrates 87th On Fairways

Some of the members of the Meadow Club helped James E. Leach celebrate his 87th birthday yesterday — by playing golf.

The Meadow Clubbers held a birthday luncheon for Leach, a man who has shot his age twice (a 79 when he was 79 in 1967 and an 85 when he was 86 last year). Then they went to the course.

Two foursomes finished but the winds were too strong and two other foursomes couldn't complete play. Leach shot a 96 for a net 76 and Ralph Leister shot a 94.

Leach is a retired real estate developer and broker.

SAN GERONIMO National Golf Club women's champion Nancy Gapinski has found new fields to conquer.

Mrs. Gapinski won the North Bay Women's Championship by one stroke. She prevailed over 100 golfers competing May 6, 8, and 10 at Rohnert Park Municipal, Indian Valley and Kennedy Park (Napa). Her three day score was 82-82-77 — 241.

CORRECTION. In last Friday's column item discussing the lengthening of the Peacock Gap Course, the layout figures reported were erroneous. The listed figures were 4,011 yards and 4,200. The correct figure for current layout is 6,011, and it will be expanded to 6,200.

THE NOVATO Chamber of Commerce will hold an invitational golf tournament June 5 at the Indian Valley Golf Club. A 1 p.m. shotgun start is planned. Cost is $10.

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Phils' Hutton: 'I'm Ready'

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Tommy Hutton thinks he'll be ready for a rest — along about late October.

"They say I can't play every day but I played every day in the minors — look up my averages," the Philadelphia Phils' reserve first baseman says.

The record books shows he hit .328 and .352 in Spokane in 1970 and 1971 but he hasn't been able to break into the Phils' regular lineup.

"I'm ready. How can I be tired? I've been resting for three years. I can rest after the World Series in October."

Hutton got a chance to play last night for the second straight game because Willie Montanez has a sore wrist and he drove in five runs with two homers and a single to pace the Philadelphia Phils to a 6-3 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Hutton, now 28, was picked up by the Phils after the 1971 season in a deal with Los Angeles for Larry Hisle. He batted 381 and 247 times the last two years for the Phils while hitting .260 and .263.

The five RBIs were a career high in a single game for Hutton. He singled in the first run in the first inning after Del Unser doubled. He hit a three-run homer in the third after singles by Unser and Greg Luzinski off loser Mike Torrez and added another homer in the fifth off reliever John Montague.

In the other National League games, New York downed St. Louis 6-4, Pittsburgh topped Chicago 5-2 and Atlanta routed San Diego 11-1. In the American League, Kansas City edged Texas 5-3 and Chicago edged Oakland 4-3.

Braves 11, Padres 1

Marty Perez drove in six runs, three of them in the second inning with his second homer of the year, and Dave Johnson added a pair of home runs to give the Braves the easy win over San Diego.

Pirates 5, Cubs 2

Ken Brett and Bruce Kison combined on a nine-hitter and Brett also drove in two runs to pace the Pirates over the Cubs.

Royals 5, Rangers 3

John Mayberry's two-run, 450-foot homer led Kansas City over Texas.

Mets 6, Cards 4

Ted Martinez' two-run doubled capped a four-run fifth inning that carried the Mets over the Cards.

Tennis Champ Redwood Wins

Redwood High School completed its seventh straight championship tennis season yesterday with a 7-0 Marin County Athletic League victory over Marin Catholic. Redwood ended the season with a 13-1 record.

Terra Linda coach Chris Ahern and Tam coach Joel Calpin refused to tell the outcome of their match, citing their objections the Independent-Journal's reduced coverage.

RESULTS

Redwood 7, Marin Catholic 0, at Collage of Marin. First singles — Henry Jacobson (R) d. Frank Casella, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Drake 5, San Rafael 2, at San Rafael Gene Lachelt (D) d. Mark Sabella, 6-1, 6-1

San Marin d. Novato, forfeit.

Final Practice For Indy Racers

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — Indianapolis "500" hopefuls were down to the nitty gritty today—the last full day of practice before tomorrow's scheduled final round of time trials for the May 26 race.

Time trials this year were trimmed from four to two days in the name of energy conservation, and only bad weather could force extension of the qualifying time to Sunday. Practice time also was shortened by a week this year.

There was a 30 per cent chance of rain Saturday, indicating that there probably will be enough dry time to fill the remaining 18 spots open in the 33-car field.

Thus, it boiled down to a now-or-never situation for the unqualified cars, crews and drivers.

Three former "500" champions ran speeds in practice yesterday which should easily get them into the lineup.

Al Unser, Albuquerque, N.M., a two-time winner here, had the day's top speed of 187.617 miles per hour despite windy weather.

Mario Andretti, Nazareth, Pa., another ex-winner, had a lap of 184.577, and defending champion Gordon Johncock, Phoenix, Ariz., was clocked at 184.949.

The only other driver over 180 Thursday was Dick Simon, Salt Lake City, with a 183.374 top speed.

More than a dozen cars had been above 180 on Wednesday when racing weather was much better.

Eleven cars still have a chance at the pole position tentatively held now by three-time "500" king A.J. Foyt, Houston, Tex. These 11 machines didn't get a chance to run last Saturday.

One of the cars slated for practice today is the machine wrecked last Friday by Denny Zimmerman, Glastonbury, Conn. Zimmerman's crew reported Thursday it had completed extensive repairs to the racer.

Larry McCoy, a rookie from Langhorne, Pa., escaped injury yesterday when his car spun twice in the No. 2 turn. The machine did not hit the wall and was not damaged.

gelding who has won two consecutive grass races at Pimlico including a division of the Woodlawn Stakes. Heir to the Line, winner of last Saturday's Preakness Prep, is by the Bold Ruler mare Borderline.

In addition to the starters with Bold Ruler connections, other Preakness entries include Derby runner-up Hudson County; J.R.'s Pet, No. 4 finisher at Churchill Downs, and Little Current, the fifth-place finisher.

Rounding out the 13-horse field, which was two shy of the maximum which could be handled at Pimlico without running two divisions, are Jolly Johu, All Game, Kin Run, and Silver Florin, who was made a supplementary entry for $10,000 after failing to be nominated for $100 by his owners.

Television coverage by KPIX Channel 5 locally is scheduled for 2 p.m.-3 p.m. PDT.

FISH AND GAME

By AL GIDDINGS

Winds Howling Across The Bay

Winds and more winds! The bay and ocean have been in a continual wild state from these winds. Fishing for bass, sturgeon and salmon has been really tough. My advice is to stay home and do some garden work. Reading about those two people who drowned a few days ago in the rough waters of the ocean should make you think. It's just not worth bucking the rough waters. Things will cool down in a week or so, then's the time to go.

Here is a general rundown of this year's proposed hunting regulations for your vocation planning.

The California Fish and Game Commission has announced proposed regulations for 1974-75 that would cut back inland and late deer hunting seasons but would restore the fourth week of the season in the northeast and give Californians a chance to hunt migratory (California-Oregon) interstate deer herds.

Proposed regulations, or "determinations" as the commission calls them, are rules the Fish and Game Commission intends to adopt but still are subject to change.

Mammal and furbearer hunting regulations for 1974-75 will be adopted by the commission following a final hearing May 31 in Los Angeles. The new rules will take effect July 1.

As recommended by the Department of Fish and Game, inland and late deer hunting seasons would open a week later than last year in an effort to keep openings from falling during periods of extreme fire hazard and to reduce the harvest while deer numbers are declining and habitat is deteriorating.

In addition, the late season would close a week earlier than in 1973, and the hunt would be limited to five rather than seven weeks.

The commission also announced it intends to extend the season in the northeastern area one week, through Oct. 27, and to move the northwestern boundary of the area from Highway 97 west to Interstate 5.

The change would give California hunters an unaccustomed chance to go after the interstate deer herds, which winter in this state but are hunted by Oregonians.

Commissioners also indicated they will move the northern boundary of the late deer season area north from Highway 32 to Highway 44, extending the season in eastern Tehama County for two weeks.

And in the south, commissioners tentatively removed an area of Los Angeles County north of Highway 118 and west of Highway 99 from the late general season area andplaced it in the early season region.

The commission indicated it would go along with a new Department of Fish and Game recommendation for a coastal bear season in the area north of San Francisco beginning Sept. 21 and running through Dec. 15. The Fish and Game said the proposal would enable hunters to take advantage of better weather.

Creation of the special season would remove the north coast area from the regular bear season in 43 California counties Oct. 12 through Jan. 1, 1975.

Regulation changes on furbearers as indicated by tentative commission action, generally tightening restrictions, would: (1) extend to the entire state limited and closed seasons on muskrat and beaver; (2) remove bobcat from the list of nongame animals that can be taken at any time; (3) outlaw some traps; (4) prohibit the use of nonregistered traps for taking furbearers commercially; (5) require the removal of animals from traps daily, and (6) permit the pursuit of bobcats and gray foxes by dogs March 1-July 31, 1975, providing that the pursued animals are not killed or injured.

Prep Baseball Game Moved To Tomorrow

San Marin High School will play champion Redwood tomorrow at 8 p.m. at Albert Field in a season-ending Marin County Athletic League baseball game.

The game originally was scheduled for today at 4 p.m. at San Marin.

I WAS A 116 GOLFER!
WITHIN 10 DAYS I SHOT 74!

My 10-day scores were 116-99-97-93-87-88-82-79-78-74! A total of 42 strokes off! My name is Allan Sadler. I'm 55 years old, had dozens of lessons, own 64 books on the "golf swing" and bought four different sets of clubs in five years. And hit thousands of balls on the range. The result? 116! I hated golf! But who can quit?

One morning I awakened at 4 o'clock, thinking of the "swing". Obviously, I thought, if all the books and pros are right, we'd all be playing good golf. But we aren't. Therefore, we're stupid. But this couldn't be true, either. A vital "something" had to be missing from this huge mass of instruction.

I got up, tested it in front of a mirror — and waited for dawn. I knew I had it! That "something" never mentioned by pros because they aren't aware of it!

*For 10 days I tested this discovery — from driver to putter. It worked with each and every club in the bag. Drives were long and straight! Putts sank like crazy! Because every friend's handicap has plummeted! It has to be simple to go from 116 to 74 in 10 days! It is simple! So simple you'll wonder why you or some pro didn't think of it. Only one single thing to think of! And so very easy to do! The "magic move" of every top star of golf. The "magic move" you can make your very first time out! To cut your score drastically!

HOW A GIANT LIMBERS UP

San Francisco reserve infielder Damaso Blanco completed his daily dozen exercises before Monday night's game with the Reds. Apparently, the Giant wanted to be physically prepared if he was called on in Cincinnati. He didn't play Monday night in the Giants 4-1 loss. See Giants story, page 43.

ABA Troubles For Carolina

NEW YORK (UPI) — Trouble seems to follow the American Basketball Association in all seasons but for the last seven years, the Spring has always brought fresh rumors of collapse.

Even after its most successful season, artistically, competitively and financially, the ABA appears to be losing two or three franchises if not toppling altogether.

Carolina Cougars owner Tedd Munchak is expected to dissolve the team at the June 20 league meeting. Munchak already has told Cougar President-General Manager Carl Scheer and Coach Larry Brown to "seek employment elsewhere" and yesterday sold Ted McClain, one of the best guards in the ABA, for cash to Kentucky. The Cougars' Greensboro office has been closed permanently.

Last Friday, the Cougars placed 6-foot-11 center Jim Chones on waivers but Scheer said that "had been planned a long time ago." Chones failed to live up to expections and certainly didn't merit his $300,000 annual salary. No other ABA team apparently wanted to pay that kind of money and Chones, who signed a $1-million contract with the New York Nets two years ago, became a free agent Tuesday. He has been negotiating with Cleveland of the National Basketball Association and is expected to sign next week.

Apparently, Munchak, disillusioned with trying to keep his head above water in the turbulent world of pro basketball and disappointed after failing to land UCLA All-America Bill Walton, is trying to peddle his players or release them outright to cut his losses —estimated by Scheer as "considerably more than $500,000 this year."

Cagle, Elder Lead Large Marin Track Delegation

George Cagle and Darrell Elder, seeking to return to the state track and field meet, will lead a large Marin contingent into the Division III meet tomorrow at Santa Rosa Junior College.

Trials will begin at 9 a.m. and finals at 1:30 p.m. Top five finishers in varsity and Class B will qualify for the North Coast Section meet next Friday and Saturday at College of Marin, the last step before the state meet.

No girls competition will be held tomorrow. Top four finishers in the league meet qualified automatically for North Coast.

Elder, from Redwood High School, reached the state in the shot put last year, but has been strongest this season in the discus, with a heave of 186-3 in last Saturday's Marin County Athletic League finals.

He faces virtually no challenge in the discus, but must contend with Tim Johnson of Petaluma, who has done 53-10, in the shot. Elder qualified at 55-11¼.

Cagle's road may be tougher. The Novato High star reached the state in the 880-yard run last year, and qualified for Division III this year in 1:57.3. He will be challenged by Ty Hadley of Vintage of Napa (1:54.6) and Dan Aldridge of Petaluma (1:55.5).

Cagle also is a contender in the 440 with 50.1, especially since Petaluma's Jose Martinez may skip the division meet in hopes of being placed directly in North Coast on a hardship waiver. He dislocated a shoulder two weeks ago.

An outstanding all-Marin battle figures to occur in the mile among San Rafael's Ray Green, Tamalpais' Steve Locey and Redwood's Dave Brainerd. In the two-mile, Petaluma's Jon Sisler (9:15.6) is the favorite.

Several other Marinites have chances. Novato sprinter-hurdler Tom Bridges had an outstanding MCAL meet. Redwood's Mark Kilmer is a threat in the long and triple jumps. Tamalpais' Fred Adams will contend in the hurdles and jumps, and Marin high jumpers Jack Hagler and Steve Trobbe of Redwood and Vic Slattery of San Rafael all cleared 6-0, not impressive but better than the qualifying jumps from up north.

U.S. WINS IN FEDERATION CUP TENNIS

NAPLES, Italy (UPI) — The second round went as easily as the first for Sharon Walsh of San Rafael and her United States teammates.

Walsh won the doubles to help the U.S. to a 3-0 quarter-final sweep of France yesterday in the Federation Cup women's tennis tournament here, duplicating a sweep of Poland on Tuesday.

Walsh and Julie Heldman defeated Gail Chanfreau and Florence Guedy, 6-3, 6-1. In singles, Heldman whipped Chanfreau, 6-2, 6-2, and Jeanne Evert beat Odile de Roubin, 6-3, 6-4.

West Germany also swept its quarter-final match from Romania, 3-0.

Mt. Tam Wins In 2 Sports

Mt. Tamalpais School won in two sports yesterday in Ross.

The tennis team (10-1 in the Bay Counties League) whipped Royce Academy of Oakland, 5-0.

In lacrosse, Mt. Tam whipped San Rafael Lacrosse Club, 13-1. Mt. Tam is 2-5-1 in the Ira Markwett Junior Lacrosse League. Matt Stone led Mt. Tam with five goals and two assists.

FISH AND GAME

By AL GIDDINGS

Winds Howling Across The Bay

Winds and more winds! The bay and ocean have been in a continual wild state from these winds. Fishing for bass, sturgeon and salmon has been really tough. My advice is to stay home and do some garden work. Reading about those two people who drowned a few days ago in the rough waters of the ocean should make you think. It's just not worth bucking the rough waters. Things will cool down in a week or so, then's the time to go.

Here is a general rundown of this year's proposed hunting regulations for your vocation planning.

The California Fish and Game Commission has announced proposed regulations for 1974-75 that would cut back inland and late deer hunting seasons but would restore the fourth week of the season in the northeast and give Californians a chance to hunt migratory (California-Oregon) interstate deer herds.

Proposed regulations, or "determinations" as the commission calls them, are rules the Fish and Game Commission intends to adopt but still are subject to change.

Mammal and furbearer hunting regulations for 1974-75 will be adopted by the commission following a final hearing May 31 in Los Angeles. The new rules will take effect July 1.

As recommended by the Department of Fish and Game, inland and late deer hunting seasons would open a week later than last year in an effort to keep openings from falling during periods of extreme fire hazard and to reduce the harvest while deer numbers are declining and habitat is deteriorating.

In addition, the late season would close a week earlier than in 1973, and the hunt would be limited to five rather than seven weeks.

The commission also announced it intends to extend the season in the northeastern area one week, through Oct. 27, and to move the northwestern boundary of the area from Highway 97 west to Interstate 5.

The change would give California hunters an unaccustomed chance to go after the interstate deer herds, which winter in this state but are hunted by Oregonians.

Commissioners also indicated they will move the northern boundary of the late deer season area north from Highway 32 to Highway 44, extending the season in eastern Tehama County for two weeks.

And in the south, commissioners tentatively removed an area of Los Angeles County north of Highway 118 and west of Highway 99 from the late general season area andplaced it in the early season region.

The commission indicated it would go along with a new Department of Fish and Game recommendation for a coastal bear season in the area north of San Francisco beginning Sept. 21 and running through Dec. 15. The Fish and Game said the proposal would enable hunters to take advantage of better weather.

Creation of the special season would remove the north coast area from the regular bear season in 43 California counties Oct. 12 through Jan. 1, 1975.

Regulation changes on furbearers as indicated by tentative commission action, generally tightening restrictions, would: (1) extend to the entire state limited and closed seasons on muskrat and beaver; (2) remove bobcat from the list of nongame animals that can be taken at any time; (3) outlaw some traps; (4) prohibit the use of nonregistered traps for taking furbearers commercially; (5) require the removal of animals from traps daily, and (6) permit the pursuit of bobcats and gray foxes by dogs March 1-July 31, 1975, providing that the pursued animals are not killed or injured.

Prep Baseball Game Moved To Tomorrow

San Marin High School will play champion Redwood tomorrow at 8 p.m. at Albert Field in a season-ending Marin County Athletic League baseball game.

The game originally was scheduled for today at 4 p.m. at San Marin.

Elder, from Redwood High School, reached the state in the shot put last year, but has been strongest this season in the discus, with a heave of 186-3 in last Saturday's Marin County Athletic League finals.

He faces virtually no challenge in the discus, but must contend with Tim Johnson of Petaluma, who has done 53-10, in the shot. Elder qualified at 55-11¼.

Cagle's road may be tougher. The Novato High star reached the state in the 880-yard run last year, and qualified for Division III this year in 1:57.3. He will be challenged by Ty Hadley of Vintage of Napa (1:54.6) and Dan Aldridge of Petaluma (1:55.5).

Cagle also is a contender in the 440 with 50.1, especially since Petaluma's Jose Martinez may skip the division meet in hopes of being placed directly in North Coast on a hardship waiver. He dislocated a shoulder two weeks ago.

An outstanding all-Marin battle figures to occur in the mile among San Rafael's Ray Green, Tamalpais' Steve Locey and Redwood's Dave Brainerd. In the two-mile, Petaluma's Jon Sisler (9:15.6) is the favorite.

Several other Marinites have chances. Novato sprinter-hurdler Tom Bridges had an outstanding MCAL meet. Redwood's Mark Kilmer is a threat in the long and triple jumps. Tamalpais' Fred Adams will contend in the hurdles and jumps, and Marin high jumpers Jack Hagler and Steve Trobbe of Redwood and Vic Slattery of San Rafael all cleared 6-0, not impressive but better than the qualifying jumps from up north.

How Conversion Privilege Works

By ROGER E. SPEAR

Q. Would you please explain how the conversion privilege on American Telephone & Telegraph $4. cv. preferred (NYSE) works?—J.H.

A. This series of Telephone preferred may, at the option of the owner, be converted into 1.05 shares of the common. At current trading prices, the preferred would be worth $49.35 a share if converted. Since the senior issue is trading at a 6.9 per cent premium, conversion would represent a loss of capital. Furthermore, the current yield is 7.6 per cent versus 6.6 per cent on the common. After July 31, 1974, the company has the option to redeem this issue at $51. In view of the huge capital requirements of the Bell System ($9.9 billion in 1974) and the record interest rates on debt offerings, redemption appears unlikely.

Q. We want to buy 100 shares of a utility company yeilding at least 7½ per cent, payable in March, June, Sept. and Dec. What do you suggest? — R.L.

A. Washington Water Power (NYSE) is currently trading to yield 7.9 per cent on the recently increased dividend. The new quarterly rate of 37 cents per share is payable on the 15th o f the months selected by you. In addition to your criteria for investment, WWP meets several standards which I consider important. It is one of the few utilities which reported a strong gain (+15.1 per cent in the first quarter net income. On average, 68 utilities, as reported in a Wall St. Journal study, eked out only a 1.1 per cent year-to-year increase in the March quarter. The record $2.04 per share reported for 1973 was the 12th straight annual high in earnings. Dividend hikes have run apace. The share, at less than 9 times projected 1974 net, are trading below book value.

The company's electric power is primarily hydro-based, although a 15 per cent-owned coal-fried plant went on stream recently. A fuel adjustment clause has covered WWP's increased costs for natural gas supplies. If the company's electric rate hike is granted, the first request in 14 years, it will boost revenues by $6 million annually.

Suggested retail price is $6,089, not including taxes, license, dealer preparation and transportation. Marin dealers are Annex Motors in San Rafael and Novato Datsun Inc.

How Conversion Privilege Works

By ROGER E. SPEAR

Q. Would you please explain how the conversion privilege on American Telephone & Telegraph $4. cv. preferred (NYSE) works?— J.H.

A. This series of Telephone preferred may, at the option of the owner, be converted into 1.05 shares of the common. At current trading prices, the preferred would be worth $49.35 a share if converted. Since the senior issue is trading at a 6.9 per cent premium, conversion would represent a loss of capital. Furthermore, the current yield is 7.6 per cent versus 6.6 per cent on the common. After July 31, 1974, the company has the option to redeem this issue at $51. In view of the huge capital requirements of the Bell System ($9.9 billion in 1974) and the record interest rates on debt offerings, redemption appears unlikely.

Q. We want to buy 100 shares of a utility company yeilding at least 7½ per cent, payable in March, June, Sept. and Dec. What do you suggest? — R.L.

A. Washington Water Power (NYSE) is currently trading to yield 7.9 per cent on the recently increased dividend. The new quarterly rate of 37 cents per share is payable on the 15th o f the months selected by you. In addition to your criteria for investment, WWP meets several standards which I consider important. It is one of the few utilities which reported a strong gain (+15.1 per cent in the first quarter net income. On average, 68 utilities, as reported in a Wall St. Journal study, eked out only a 1.1 per cent year-to-year increase in the March quarter. The record $2.04 per share reported for 1973 was the 12th straight annual high in earnings. Dividend hikes have run apace. The share, at less than 9 times projected 1974 net, are trading below book value.

The company's electric power is primarily hydro-based, although a 15 per cent-owned coal-fried plant went on stream recently. A fuel adjustment clause has covered WWP's increased costs for natural gas supplies. If the company's electric rate hike is granted, the first request in 14 years, it will boost revenues by $6 million annually.

Suggested retail price is $6,089, not including taxes, license, dealer preparation and transportation. Marin dealers are Annex Motors in San Rafael and Novato Datsun Inc.

OLD GAL FOOLED 'EM ALL

When 26-year-old Tar Baby gave birth to her first foal this week she fooled most everyone, since mares usually finish breeding by the time they are 15. According to Robert Pulse, professor of animal science at Oregon State University, Tar Baby is the equivalent of a 100-year-old woman. The rare birth took place Sunday on a farm near Beaverton, Ore.

Geothermal Steam Is Tapped In Tomato-Growing Operation

SUSANVILLE (AP) — While talk and speculation continue on geothermal power, three men in northeast California are doing something with it.

They're growing geothermal tomatoes.

That is, they're reaping year-round crops of tomatoes from hothouses heated by natural springs.

"It's really the same geothermal power everyone is talking about," said Phil Gutman, a former San Diego computer executive, in a recent interview.

Gutman first saw the spring, called Hobo Wells, while on a hunting trip in a finger of Nevada-type sagebrush that reaches into the Sierra Nevada.

There's nothing exotic about the operation, Gutman said. The water comes up boiling hot, and is pumped through the pipe framework of the hothouses, and through pipes in the sidewalks between growing pads. The frameworks are covered with plastic sheeting.

The tomatoes stay subtropically warm even if there's a foot of snow on the ground.

One hothouse should soon be producing 20 tons of tomatoes, which now sell for 69 cents a pound in Northern California, and could perhaps be flown to New York for $1 a pound in winter, said Gutman.

He and his son Andy, and associate Mark Souza, have two hothouses are building four more.

But they don't call themselves farmers. They're "hydroponic growers," said Gutman.

Energy Crisis Job Loss Figures Show A Decline

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Energy crisis job layoffs in California have dropped from a weekly high of 4,938 during February to less than 500 the first week of May, state employment officials said yesterday.

In fact, the state Employment Development Department said, such layoffs now represent such a small part — 1.2 per cent — of the unemployment picture, it had discontinued tabulating the totals.

The department said fuel shortage job statistics were compiled by counting the number of jobless persons who claimed unemployment insurance benefits.

The number of first claims ranged from 1,614 in the first week to a high of 4,938 in the tenth week, dropping steadily until the May 3 total of 476, the department said.

"Compared with all unemployment insurance claims during the same period the energy-related claims averaged 4.9 per cent of the total. In the final week, they represented only 1.2 per cent of all claims," according to the department.

The total of fuel shortage layoffs from Dec. 1 to May 3 was 48,700. However, the department said most of the claimants found other employment and at the end of the period only 9,091 were still looking for other jobs.

The department said it had kept the records on a weekly basis at the request of the U.S. Department of Labor. But the federal department said it no longer required the report since the layoffs had markedly diminished.

OLD GAL FOOLED 'EM ALL

When 26-year-old Tar Baby gave birth to her first foal this week she fooled most everyone, since mares usually finish breeding by the time they are 15. According to Robert Pulse, professor of animal science at Oregon State University, Tar Baby is the equivalent of a 100-year-old woman. The rare birth took place Sunday on a farm near Beaverton, Ore.

Geothermal Steam Is Tapped In Tomato-Growing Operation

SUSANVILLE (AP) — While talk and speculation continue on geothermal power, three men in northeast California are doing something with it.

They're growing geothermal tomatoes.

That is, they're reaping year-round crops of tomatoes from hothouses heated by natural springs.

"It's really the same geothermal power everyone is talking about," said Phil Gutman, a former San Diego computer executive, in a recent interview.

Gutman first saw the spring, called Hobo Wells, while on a hunting trip in a finger of Nevada-type sagebrush that reaches into the Sierra Nevada.

There's nothing exotic about the operation, Gutman said. The water comes up boiling hot, and is pumped through the pipe framework of the hothouses, and through pipes in the sidewalks between growing pads. The frameworks are covered with plastic sheeting.

The tomatoes stay subtropically warm even if there's a foot of snow on the ground.

One hothouse should soon be producing 20 tons of tomatoes, which now sell for 69 cents a pound in Northern California, and could perhaps be flown to New York for $1 a pound in winter, said Gutman.

He and his son Andy, and associate Mark Souza, have two hothouses are building four more.

But they don't call themselves farmers. They're "hydroponic growers," said Gutman.

Energy Crisis Job Loss Figures Show A Decline

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Energy crisis job layoffs in California have dropped from a weekly high of 4,938 during February to less than 500 the first week of May, state employment officials said yesterday.

In fact, the state Employment Development Department said, such layoffs now represent such a small part — 1.2 per cent — of the unemployment picture, it had discontinued tabulating the totals.

The department said fuel shortage job statistics were compiled by counting the number of jobless persons who claimed unemployment insurance benefits.

The number of first claims ranged from 1,614 in the first week to a high of 4,938 in the tenth week, dropping steadily until the May 3 total of 476, the department said.

"Compared with all unemployment insurance claims during the same period the energy-related claims averaged 4.9 per cent of the total. In the final week, they represented only 1.2 per cent of all claims," according to the department.

The total of fuel shortage layoffs from Dec. 1 to May 3 was 48,700. However, the department said most of the claimants found other employment and at the end of the period only 9,091 were still looking for other jobs.

The department said it had kept the records on a weekly basis at the request of the U.S. Department of Labor. But the federal department said it no longer required the report since the layoffs had markedly diminished.

California Special A Fine Bit Of Work

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — Some low-grade guru here once called California a state of mind, not a state. He was deft, of course. But a nifty TV special arriving next week may help you decide the matter yourself.

It's called "The Place For No Story," comes from station KQED in San Francisco and is being offered the nation's public TV stations Monday night by the Public Broadcasting Service.

We tout it now to give you ample time to cancel scheduled engagements, chill a jug of wine and commandeer the family TV set for this one-hour aerial and ground tour of the promised land.

The show, put together by Philip Greene, is the first California documentary I've ever seen that really has the feel of the place, from snow-capped Mount Shasta to the continuing smog festival of Los Angeles.

And he does it in a wild, unconventional way, with most of the tour filmed from helicopters, light planes, even an old B26 bomber, working at altitudes from five to 15,000 feet and higher.

And there's no traditional narrative drone of facts and figures or "talking-head" interviews.

He instead uses snippets of sound — rushing wind at the seacoast, legislative mumbles in Sacramento, a woodpecker tapping in a lumberyard, flower children singing the joys of pot in a pasture, the urban clash of radio news, traffic reports, smog alerts, rock and Bach.

One radio slice from the hot, fertile Salinas Valley beautifully illustrates California's dual culture, as a pitchman hawking campers and trucks ends his rapid-fire spiel with: ". . . and se hable espanol!"

It's typical of the brilliant earplay abounding in this sensory travelogue, which starts in the relatively unspoiled beauty of northern California and heads southward to civilization.

"The Place For No Story" is one fine piece of work.

Aldrin Treated

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Moonwalker Edwin E. (Buzz) Aldrin, who has been speaking and writing about mental illness, scrubbed a scheduled speech yesterday because of recurring symptoms of mental depression that developed after his Apollo 11 journey.

California Special A Fine Bit Of Work

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — Some low-grade guru here once called California a state of mind, not a state. He was deft, of course. But a nifty TV special arriving next week may help you decide the matter yourself.

It's called "The Place For No Story," comes from station KQED in San Francisco and is being offered the nation's public TV stations Monday night by the Public Broadcasting Service.

We tout it now to give you ample time to cancel scheduled engagements, chill a jug of wine and commandeer the family TV set for this one-hour aerial and ground tour of the promised land.

The show, put together by Philip Greene, is the first California documentary I've ever seen that really has the feel of the place, from snow-capped Mount Shasta to the continuing smog festival of Los Angeles.

And he does it in a wild, unconventional way, with most of the tour filmed from helicopters, light planes, even an old B26 bomber, working at altitudes from five to 15,000 feet and higher.

And there's no traditional narrative drone of facts and figures or "talking-head" interviews.

He instead uses snippets of sound — rushing wind at the seacoast, legislative mumbles in Sacramento, a woodpecker tapping in a lumberyard, flower children singing the joys of pot in a pasture, the urban clash of radio news, traffic reports, smog alerts, rock and Bach.

One radio slice from the hot, fertile Salinas Valley beautifully illustrates California's dual culture, as a pitchman hawking campers and trucks ends his rapid-fire spiel with: "... and se hable espanol!"

It's typical of the brilliant earplay abounding in this sensory travelogue, which starts in the relatively unspoiled beauty of northern California and heads southward to civilization.

"The Place For No Story" is one fine piece of work.

We're All Together For San Rafael Centennial

Independent-Journal
SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY
50 SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, MAY 17, 1974 EDITORIAL PAGE

If you've been in downtown San Rafael or near the old Dixie schoolhouse or the Miwok Archaeological Preserve the last couple of days, no doubt you've seen throngs of children, shepherded by their teachers.

They are following the "Centennial Trails," which youngsters from all schools in San Rafael — including private and parochial schools and those of Dixie School District — will have done by next Friday.

FOR THE SCHOOL children, this is part of an observance of San Rafael's Centennial which began weeks ago with appearances before their classes of speakers from the American Association of University Women to talk about San Rafael history, showing of a historical film strip prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Tom Burke, a "write-on" contest on the history of our city, and other Centennial-related activities.

For the rest of us, San Rafael Centennial activities will roll into high gear tonight with the first performance of "Jubilee," an historical musical production written for the occasion by Mr. and Mrs. Paul McMullen and presented by the San Rafael Parent-Teacher Association Council. It will be played in San Rafael High School auditorium each night through next Friday.

Tomorrow there will be dedication of the newest city park, and the premiere showing of "San Rafael Illustrated," a movie prepared largely from clips of old films by San Rafael and Terra Linda High Schools' film classes, and a senior citizens' art show at the Whistle Stop.

From then on, there'll be no letup in centennial activities until they wind up with a fireworks show the night of May 26 off the East San Rafael waterfront, visible from anywhere "east of the hill."

All around for days we've been seeing buttons and bumper strips advertising, "I'm Part of San Rafael Centennial." Store windows have been blossoming out with centennial displays. Costumes of 100 years ago have become the "in" thing.

THE SAN RAFAEL Centennial is a great excursion into nostalgia, keyed to the fact that the city was incorporated 100 years ago, in 1874.

But it's a great deal more than that.

It's a revival of civic pride, an opportunity for all San Rafael residents to celebrate the fact that they live in one of the finest little cities to be found anywhere — and to learn something about their city's history in the process.

Centennial preparations have touched a vigrant chord. Thousands of people, from school children to oldsters, have become involved. They've found a common interest, a common source of pride, a feeling of belonging. They're glad that they're "a part" of the San Rafael Centennial.

WE'VE NEVER seen anything "catch hold" in San Rafael so much as this centennial celebration. We're proud, too, to be a part of it. Let us all attend as many of the events as we can, and join in the pleasures of celebrating our heritage.

And when Centennial Week is over, let's all try to keep the togetherness, the feeling of belonging, that it has generated.

Among Things That 'Wonder Me': The Label Of 'Conservationist'

From time to time folks ask me where the expression I often use, "it wonders me," comes from. I first heard it during a musical play at the Curran Theater in San Francisco. It was built around the Amish people, a religious sect —farmers in the main — originally along the eastern seaboard, but which has spread out into other states.

An Amish girl was riding with her father in one of their two-seated one-horse buggies. She was asking her father (in song) about many things that "wondered" her. Its complete musical expression of, to her, mind-boggling unexplainable action of others just fits the things and actions that I write about, now and then.

FOR INSTANCE: The other day I read that a quasi political group had endorsed one of our throne room gents for higher office because "he was both a liberal and a conservationist."

Now, this certainly would wonder anyone who had followed his career.

Joining those two terms has wondered me for a long time. There is a fellow I know about, who was labeled a couple years ago in one of the weeklies as "an arch conservative." Actually he was. He wanted to conserve the court house site as the center of the business activity of the county by constructing around the historical building a many-storied one. He didn't prevail.

The conservationists were not interested in conserving the heritage.

AS I GO ON with this yarn let me emphasize, first, that there is no question in my mind as to their individual right of opinion. I simply am trying to express my wonderment as to the use of terms.

It was principally the conservationists who got behind the move to abandon the historical site and go out to the present Brasilia complex. The soft rolling hills were violated, as the word, "environmental," had not been discovered. So those lovely rolling hills were not conserved either, but were dug into —tops scraped off —all in the name of being a tourist attraction because of the signature of a well-publicized, brilliant artist. And it has often wondered me: what would the environmentalists say if the open spaces that were there then were to be violated now with the structures and roads and parking places and signs and cops with traffic tickets and the exhausts from the cars?

Oh yes, there is going to be a 12 per cent hike in property values this year. Who's for lower budgets?

Revolt In Butte County: Planners Vs. The People

By RUS WALTON

Somewhere east of Oroville, out past that dam big lake and up in the hill country of Craig Moorestown Ridge, the folks are rugged individualists. They call spades shovels and they use them to clobber rattlesnakes and other varmint. They do not cotton to mole-slick politicians or bureaucratic dudes who mess with their lives or their lands.

Right now those folks are a bit upset. The Butte County Planning Commission is horsing around, arguing about rezoning the hill country.

THE WHOLE FLAP started last December when the staff of the county planning commission arbitrarily, and without public hearing, changed the Craig Moorestown Ridge zoning from A-2 to TM-20. A-2 is the most lenient to Butte County's zoning classifications. It says a guy can do about anything he wants with his property as long as he doesn't make explosives. TM-20 designates timber-mountainous land and limits the property to one dwelling for every 20 acres.

When the hill folk heard about the TM-20 caper, they blew their stacks. Fred Wohlschlagel and Marian Wojcik and a bunch of their neighbors organized about half of the people in the area into a taxpayers association and declared war.

"All we want is to be left alone. Where do those planning guys get off telling us how we can use our land? It's up to us to decide how we want our land zoned. And, we want it A-2." Wohlschlagel speaks for the hill folk.

BUT HE AND Marian Wojcik and the hill folk speak a strange tongue in today's metered and measured world. Their talk is an anathema to the plotters and pinstickers. Those birds insist on a structured society with everything in its place. They are all for big plans and little people. Conform; that's the deal today. Bow down to the master planner at the county seat.

One of the planners tried to scare the hill folk into accepting the TM-20 zoning. "Don't you realize that under A-2, somebody could move in out there and start a hawg farm?" To which Marian Wojcik growled, "So what? It wouldn't smell any worse than the stuff you're trying to hand us." Mrs. W's bite is as sharp as her bark.

Part of the problem of the Craig Moorestown folks arose when the county planners filed a general land use map with the state in January. The county planning director zoned the hill country TM-20 on an interim basis and sent the plan to Babylon-by-the-Sacramento, as required by the state. Now, says the county counsel, unless the land is permanently zoned TM-20, Butte County will be out of conformity with that plan and could be sued by the state.

According to Norman Hill, special assistant to the State Resources Agency that is in charge of such matters, a county can revise its general land use plan if it chooses to do so. There is nothing in the state law that freezes a county plan into an everlasting ice pack. What the state does require is that counties abide by their general plans as long as that plan is on the books.

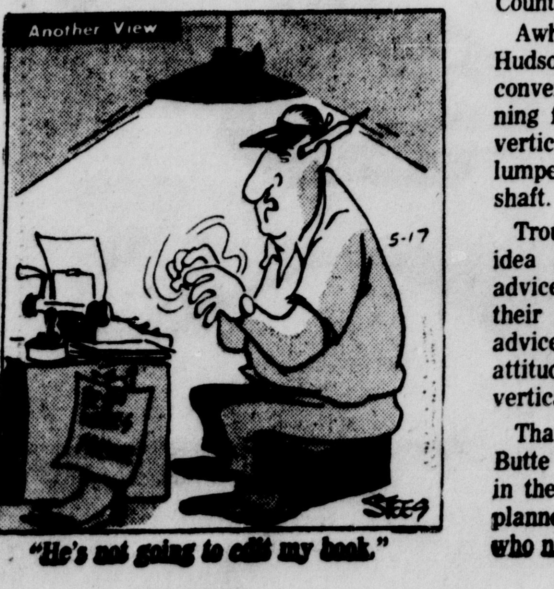
"So," says Wohlschlagel, "it's simple. Just let the state know the hill country is zoned A-2."

BUT, THAT'S not the way things work these days. Government is no longer the servant; it is the master — of plans, persons and property. Not just in Butte County, but in most of the 58.

Awhile back Herman Kahn of the Hudson Institute was asked to address a convention of city planners. Those planning fellas were all hot for the idea of vertical cities; clusters of high-rises that lumped life together around an elevator shaft.

Trouble was, the people did not like the idea and the planners sought Kahn's advice. Not advice on how to change their plans to meet public acceptance; advice on how to change the people's attitudes so they would accept those vertical cities.

That's just about what is happening in Butte County — and a lot of other places in the state these days. As far as most planners are concerned, it's the people who need changing, not the plans.



"He's not going to edit my book."

Congress Provides Reason To Turn Rascals Out

WASHINGTON — The Democratic majority in Congress has just given voters a powerful reason to "turn the rascals out."

In this instance the "rascals" are not Richard Nixon or the "reactionary" Republicans; the rascals are the reactionary Democrats — enough of them to block the first significant congressional reform in a generation.

They don't want reform if they can help it; they don't want to get a more efficient, competent Congress capable of transacting the public business better than it has in the past if the needed changes are going to upset even a little bit the power base from which the omnipotent Democratic committee chairmen have long operated. They talk virtuously about how Congress must reclaim the power which it has squandered so rashly, but act pettily and petulantly when it comes to doing it if doing it distributes some of their power elsewhere in Congress.

This, it seems to me, is the only candid judgment which can be pronounced on the decision of the Democratic Caucus in the House of Representatives, binding on the party, neatly tucking under the rug the whole package of congressional reforms painstakingly prepared by a bipartisan select committee headed by Rep. Ricahrd Bolling, D-Mo.

This crass stonewalling of congressional reform — needed by Congress, needed by the country — can be justified on no grounds and explained on only one ground: the willingness of powerful Democratic committee chairmen to put their personal political interest ahead of the national interest.

THE PURPOSE of the Bolling committee proposals is to enable Congress to do its job of governing more effectively.

They would equalize the work of major standing committees so that the work could go forward more expeditiously.

They would consolidate major policy areas. Example: Congressional responsibility for the environment is now scattered over 17 different committees and subcommittees.

They would abolish proxy voting by which committee chairmen further aggrandize their power.

The changes would vastly reduce wasteful overlapping, make the work of congress more coherent, and increase its ability to oversee the executive branch.

When the Democratic Party caucus was voting 111 to 93 to suffocate these proposals, the chairmen of most of the major committees were shouldering them down. Their theme was: Reform, yes; but not us.

THE COMMITTEE CHAIRMEN were not the only ardent opponents of congressional reform. They were eagerly — and purposefully — joined by the big labor lobbyists, the big business lobbyists, the transportation lobbysits, and the environmental lobbyists. These lobbyists must figure that they can get more of what they want from a diffuse and disorganized Congress than they can from a more coherent and better organized Congress.

And it was all done by a secret vote of the Democratic congressional majority.

Of course, they didn't vote to "kill" the reforms; that would be too bold and visible. They voted only to return the reforms to a special subcommittee obedient to the caucus. But when — and if — the reforms ever escape from this committee's secret ministrations, don't expect them ot look much like the originals.

If incumbent Democrats can't do better than this, perhaps voters will want to put new Democrats — or Republicans — who favor the reforms in their place.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Brockbank Supporter Attacks Editorial

As a member of the Citizens Advisory Committee of the Tamalpais Union High School District, I seriously question the validity of a number of statements contained in your editorial of May 10th regarding the Tam High School District Board race. To be specific:

1. Darrell Smith's "academic option" is hardly "innovative." In June of 1973 Elaine Brockbank in her report on alternative education to the board of trustees, recommended that "Tamalpais District alternatives should also include more structured or academically basic programs . . .

2. He is not, nor has been a member of the district's citizens advisory committee, nor has he ever attended a meeting of that committee.

3. His "background involvement", prior to filing for the school board, includes only a few months on an "ad hoc" citizens committee for the human sexuality program . . .

It is indeed regrettable that school matters receive such inaccurate representation.

Showing Of Home For Sale Hazardous

Heaven help the homeowner who is selling his home!

I know whereof I speak, as I am in the process of selling my home.

I am gone all day at work in San Francisco, only to come home and find my lights on, or as most recently, my front door ajar.

I have notes tacked up all over the place, but apparently to no avail, advising the realtors to be sure lights are turned off, and doors shut and locked securely.

My advice to prospective sellers of their homes is this:

Don't let anyone enter your home unless someone is there!

Opposition To Nazi Membership 'Mindless'

The mindless aspersions directed against comrade Sandra Silva because of her membership in the National Socialist White People's Party, while an employee of the San Francisco Police Department, typify the impotent mentality of the un-American mind. To such individuals, I say that the accuracy of their reasoning is in inverse proportion to their wisdom and serves to demonstrate their blatant disregard for the constitutional rights of an American citizen.

Comrade Silva embodies the best of the white race and, for this reason, she elicits feelings of justifiable inferiority in those hulks of humanity to whom racial superiority is an utter impossibility in life. This 20-year old National Socialist is, indeed, a tribute to the immortal doctrine of Adolf Hitler and a credit to the ranks of the NSWPP.

The fact that she and the multitude of American youth champion the cause of our movement and embrace the principles of Nazi ideology is proof positive that "Hitler is the future!"

Felson Supports Collective Bargaining

In response to your editorial of May 7 I wish to state my support of AB 1243, the Assembly bill which would offer collective bargaining to public employees. I do not feel one is less than a human being because he works for a public entity. As citizens we need intelligent, effective, efficient public employees. If we are to have those kinds of persons working in our behalf we must expect to offer them opportunities available to employees in private industry. I feel AB 1243 is a well-drawn bill, fair to employees as well as to public employers.

I believe the concern of most citizens is not so much with collective bargaining but with the problem of a strike by public employees. While the bill does provide for the rights to strike by employees or to lockout by employers, it specifies a series of responsible procedures necessary prior to a strike vote, including fact-finding and mediation. It also provides for injunctive relief, in the event of a strike, which may be brought by an injured citizen or by either party to the dispute.

Since your editorial singled out the teacher organizations as a party to the issue, I would also like to comment on that particular aspect. I do support the right of teachers to bargain collectively. As a parent as well as a candidate for the Ninth Assembly District seat, my primary concern is not collective bargaining but tenure . . .

I do not propose to trade the present tenure system for a collective bargaining contract which would simply substitute seniority rights for tenure. I would propose a change in tenure to include provisions whereby teachers themselves would participate with administrators in the regular review of the suitability and adequacy . . .

CAPITOL QUIPS

By PHIL DESSAUER

Imagine the confusion of a man from Mars who lands in Washington, says "Take me to your leader," and is informed we don't have one.

The suspicion persists that when Henry Kissinger reports "progress" in the Middle East, he really means he wishes he were making some.

The hard-core Nixon people won't be satisfied with the TV news coverage until the networks get some unbiased commentators like David and Julie Eisenhower.

Strip Mining Bill Passes — But Not What It's Labeled

WASHINGTON — Other House committees are busy, too. As I write, the Interior Committee is preparing to report out a bill that will be hailed by some interested parties as a major victory for the protection of the American land.

It is a strip-mining "control" bill. After years of false starts, it appears that a measure with that sobriquet is on its way to becoming law this summer.

On its face, this must be a wonderful event. Anyone who does not know by now of the terrible, widespread damage wrought by stripping in the hills of Appalachia and the Ohio Valley has neither been reading nor traveling. And the square mileage of territory to be ravaged by stripping in the West, where the effort has barely begun, will make that on this side of the Mississippi seem minor by comparison.

Anything that sets out to control this destruction, to force mining interests to minimize damage and turn to underground production instead, will be a milestone long overdue. But this bill is not it.

ANY CONGRESSMAN who will have to vote on it, or citizen preparing to cheer for it, should realize that if it is enacted, the stripping of the land will not be slowed down but speeded up. For more than three years coal operators will race to tear out all they can before somewhat stricter standards come into effect.

Even then, the bill would place eventual enforcement mainly in the hands of the states, which up to now have done a miserable job of regulation. And principal federal supervision would come through the Interior Department, whose historical goal has been to squeeze more production out of the land, rather than the Environmental Protection Agency.

One of the most noxious results of stripping is that it poisons the streams of whole regions. Yet the House bill would allow strip operators to work directly through watercourses; at other points it is so vague as to state that erosion must be controlled "as effectively as possible."

MY ANALYSIS of the bill is restrained beside that of Rep. Ken Hechler, D-W. Va., who has been inspired by the destruction of his West Virginia district to become Congress' conscience against strip mining. He and Representatives John Seiberling, D-Ohio, and Patsy Mink, D-Hawaii, fought to strengthen the current bill but lost to the Nixon administration and the coal industry.

Hechler calls this measure a "woefully weak compromise, filled with the kind of loopholes the coal and utility lobbyists have written into state strip-mine regulations for the past 30 years."

YET FOR TACTICAL reasons, the industry is wailing that the bill would be a death blow to stripping. Hechler warns that this is to enable the bill's backers to submit it to the House, then to Senate conferees, as "the only reasonable middle course between extremes." When Carl Bagge, president of the National Coal Association, maintains that the bill would allow his industry to bleed to death in two or three years, Hechler insists this is "what I bluntly label a lie."

"Having succeeded in weakening H.R. 11500 up and down the line, Mr. Bagge is now playing the game of painting this faded rose as a skunk cabbage in hopes that he can get the bill weakened even further on the floor of the House," Hechler declares.

The normal course of events would bring the bill to the floor in middle or late June. If passed there, it would go to conference for accommodation with the Senate measure passed last year, which is slightly more solid, mainly in not having the 40-month period of weak "interim" controls. But this year's events so far have not followed any normal course, and there is the prospect that the whole strip control effort could be sidetracked by impeachment proceedings.

For those dedicated to protecting the land, having to start all over again next year would be the only alternative worse than passing the House bill as is.

We're All Together For San Rafael Centennial

Independent-Journal
SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY
50 SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, MAY 17, 1974 EDITORIAL PAGE

If you've been in downtown San Rafael or near the old Dixie schoolhouse or the Miwok Archaeological Preserve the last couple of days, no doubt you've seen throngs of children, shepherded by their teachers.

They are following the "Centennial Trails," which youngsters from all schools in San Rafael — including private and parochial schools and those of Dixie School District — will have done by next Friday.

FOR THE SCHOOL children, this is part of an observance of San Rafael's Centennial which began weeks ago with appearances before their classes of speakers from the American Association of University Women to talk about San Rafael history, showing of a historical film strip prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Tom Burke, a "write-on" contest on the history of our city, and other Centennial-related activities.

For the rest of us, San Rafael Centennial activities will roll into high gear tonight with the first performance of "Jubilee," an historical musical production written for the occasion by Mr. and Mrs. Paul McMullen and presented by the San Rafael Parent-Teacher Association Council. It will be played in San Rafael High School auditorium each night through next Friday.

Tomorrow there will be dedication of the newest city park, and the premiere showing of "San Rafael Illustrated," a movie prepared largely from clips of old films by San Rafael and Terra Linda High Schools' film classes, and a senior citizens' art show at the Whistle Stop.

From then on, there'll be no letup in centennial activities until they wind up with a fireworks show the night of May 26 off the East San Rafael waterfront, visible from anywhere "east of the hill."

All around for days we've been seeing buttons and bumper strips advertising, "I'm Part of San Rafael Centennial." Store windows have been blossoming out with centennial displays. Costumes of 100 years ago have become the "in" thing.

THE SAN RAFAEL Centennial is a great excursion into nostalgia, keyed to the fact that the city was incorporated 100 years ago, in 1874.

But it's a great deal more than that.

It's a revival of civic pride, an opportunity for all San Rafael residents to celebrate the fact that they live in one of the finest little cities to be found anywhere — and to learn something about their city's history in the process.

Centennial preparations have touched a vigrant chord. Thousands of people, from school children to oldsters, have become involved. They've found a common interest, a common source of pride, a feeling of belonging. They're glad that they're "a part" of the San Rafael Centennial.

WE'VE NEVER seen anything "catch hold" in San Rafael so much as this centennial celebration. We're proud, too, to be a part of it. Let us all attend as many of the events as we can, and join in the pleasures of celebrating our heritage.

And when Centennial Week is over, let's all try to keep the togetherness, the feeling of belonging, that it has generated.

Among Things That 'Wonder Me': The Label Of 'Conservationist'

From time to time folks ask me where the expression I often use, "it wonders me," comes from. I first heard it during a musical play at the Curran Theater in San Francisco. It was built around the Amish people, a religious sect —farmers in the main — originally along the eastern seaboard, but which has spread out into other states.

An Amish girl was riding with her father in one of their two-seated one-horse buggies. She was asking her father (in song) about many things that "wondered" her. Its complete musical expression of, to her, mind-boggling unexplainable action of others just fits the things and actions that I write about, now and then.

FOR INSTANCE: The other day I read that a quasi political group had endorsed one of our throne room gents for higher office because "he was both a liberal and a conservationist."

Now, this certainly would wonder anyone who had followed his career.

Joining those two terms has wondered me for a long time. There is a fellow I know about, who was labeled a couple years ago in one of the weeklies as "an arch conservative." Actually he was. He wanted to conserve the court house site as the center of the business activity of the county by constructing around the historical building a many-storied one. He didn't prevail.

The conservationists were not interested in conserving the heritage.

AS I GO ON with this yarn let me emphasize, first, that there is no question in my mind as to their individual right of opinion. I simply am trying to express my wonderment as to the use of terms.

It was principally the conservationists who got behind the move to abandon the historical site and go out to the present Brasilia complex. The soft rolling hills were violated, as the word, "environmental," had not been discovered. So those lovely rolling hills were not conserved either, but were dug into —tops scraped off —all in the name of being a tourist attraction because of the signature of a well-publicized, brilliant artist. And it has often wondered me: what would the environmentalists say if the open spaces that were there then were to be violated now with the structures and roads and parking places and signs and cops with traffic tickets and the exhausts from the cars?

Oh yes, there is going to be a 12 per cent hike in property values this year. Who's for lower budgets?

Congress Provides Reason To Turn Rascals Out

WASHINGTON — The Democratic majority in Congress has just given voters a powerful reason to "turn the rascals out."

In this instance the "rascals" are not Richard Nixon or the "reactionary" Republicans; the rascals are the reactionary Democrats — enough of them to block the first significant congressional reform in a generation.

They don't want reform if they can help it; they don't want to get a more efficient, competent Congress capable of transacting the public business better than it has in the past if the needed changes are going to upset even a little bit the power base from which the omnipotent Democratic committee chairmen have long operated. They talk virtuously about how Congress must reclaim the power which it has squandered so rashly, but act pettily and petulantly when it comes to doing it if doing it distributes some of their power elsewhere in Congress.

This, it seems to me, is the only candid judgment which can be pronounced on the decision of the Democratic Caucus in the House of Representatives, binding on the party, neatly tucking under the rug the whole package of congressional reforms painstakingly prepared by a bipartisan select committee headed by Rep. Ricahrd Bolling, D-Mo.

This crass stonewalling of congressional reform — needed by Congress, needed by the country — can be justified on no grounds and explained on only one ground: the willingness of powerful Democratic committee chairmen to put their personal political interest ahead of the national interest.

THE PURPOSE of the Bolling committee proposals is to enable Congress to do its job of governing more effectively.

They would equalize the work of major standing committees so that the work could go forward more expeditiously.

They would consolidate major policy areas. Example: Congressional responsibility for the environment is now scattered over 17 different committees and subcommittees.

They would abolish proxy voting by which committee chairmen further aggrandize their power.

The changes would vastly reduce wasteful overlapping, make the work of congress more coherent, and increase its ability to oversee the executive branch.

When the Democratic Party caucus was voting 111 to 93 to suffocate these proposals, the chairmen of most of the major committees were shouldering them down. Their theme was: Reform, yes; but not us.

THE COMMITTEE CHAIRMEN were not the only ardent opponents of congressional reform. They were eagerly — and purposefully — joined by the big labor lobbyists, the big business lobbyists, the transportation lobbysits, and the environmental lobbyists. These lobbyists must figure that they can get more of what they want from a diffuse and disorganized Congress than they can from a more coherent and better organized Congress.

And it was all done by a secret vote of the Democratic congressional majority.

Of course, they didn't vote to "kill" the reforms; that would be too bold and visible. They voted only to return the reforms to a special subcommittee obedient to the caucus. But when — and if — the reforms ever escape from this committee's secret ministrations, don't expect them ot look much like the originals.

If incumbent Democrats can't do better than this, perhaps voters will want to put new Democrats — or Republicans — who favor the reforms in their place.

Revolt In Butte County: Planners Vs. The People

By RUS WALTON

Somewhere east of Oroville, out past that dam big lake and up in the hill country of Craig Moorestown Ridge, the folks are rugged individualists. They call spades shovels and they use them to clobber rattlesnakes and other varmint. They do not cotton to mole-slick politicians or bureaucratic dudes who mess with their lives or their lands.

Right now those folks are a bit upset. The Butte County Planning Commission is horsing around, arguing about rezoning the hill country.

THE WHOLE FLAP started last December when the staff of the county planning commission arbitrarily, and without public hearing, changed the Craig Moorestown Ridge zoning from A-2 to TM-20. A-2 is the most lenient to Butte County's zoning classifications. It says a guy can do about anything he wants with his property as long as he doesn't make explosives. TM-20 designates timber-mountainous land and limits the property to one dwelling for every 20 acres.

When the hill folk heard about the TM-20 caper, they blew their stacks. Fred Wohlschlagel and Marian Wojcik and a bunch of their neighbors organized about half of the people in the area into a taxpayers association and declared war.

"All we want is to be left alone. Where do those planning guys get off telling us how we can use our land? It's up to us to decide how we want our land zoned. And, we want it A-2." Wohlschlagel speaks for the hill folk.

BUT HE AND Marian Wojcik and the hill folk speak a strange tongue in today's metered and measured world. Their talk is an anathema to the plotters and pinstickers. Those birds insist on a structured society with everything in its place. They are all for big plans and little people. Conform; that's the deal today. Bow down to the master planner at the county seat.

One of the planners tried to scare the hill folk into accepting the TM-20 zoning. "Don't you realize that under A-2, somebody could move in out there and start a hawg farm?" To which Marian Wojcik growled, "So what? It wouldn't smell any worse than the stuff you're trying to hand us." Mrs. W's bite is as sharp as her bark.

Part of the problem of the Craig Moorestown folks arose when the county planners filed a general land use map with the state in January. The county planning director zoned the hill country TM-20 on an interim basis and sent the plan to Babylon-by-the-Sacramento, as required by the state. Now, says the county counsel, unless the land is permanently zoned TM-20, Butte County will be out of conformity with that plan and could be sued by the state.

According to Norman Hill, special assistant to the State Resources Agency that is in charge of such matters, a county can revise its general land use plan if it chooses to do so. There is nothing in the state law that freezes a county plan into an everlasting ice pack. What the state does require is that counties abide by their general plans as long as that plan is on the books.

"So," says Wohlschlagel, "it's simple. Just let the state know the hill country is zoned A-2."

BUT, THAT'S not the way things work these days. Government is no longer the servant; it is the master — of plans, persons and property. Not just in Butte County, but in most of the 58.

Awhile back Herman Kahn of the Hudson Institute was asked to address a convention of city planners. Those planning fellas were all hot for the idea of vertical cities; clusters of high-rises that lumped life together around an elevator shaft.

Trouble was, the people did not like the idea and the planners sought Kahn's advice. Not advice on how to change their plans to meet public acceptance; advice on how to change the people's attitudes so they would accept those vertical cities.

That's just about what is happening in Butte County — and a lot of other places in the state these days. As far as most planners are concerned, it's the people who need changing, not the plans.

Brockbank Supporter Attacks Editorial

As a member of the Citizens Advisory Committee of the Tamalpais Union High School District, I seriously question the validity of a number of statements contained in your editorial of May 10th regarding the Tam High School District Board race. To be specific:

1. Darrell Smith's "academic option" is hardly "innovative." In June of 1973 Elaine Brockbank in her report on alternative education to the board of trustees, recommended that "Tamalpais District alternatives should also include more structured or academically basic programs . . .

2. He is not, nor has been a member of the district's citizens advisory committee, nor has he ever attended a meeting of that committee.

3. His "background involvement", prior to filing for the school board, includes only a few months on an "ad hoc" citizens committee for the human sexuality program . . .

It is indeed regrettable that school matters receive such inaccurate representation.

Showing Of Home For Sale Hazardous

Heaven help the homeowner who is selling his home!

I know whereof I speak, as I am in the process of selling my home.

I am gone all day at work in San Francisco, only to come home and find my lights on, or as most recently, my front door ajar.

I have notes tacked up all over the place, but apparently to no avail, advising the realtors to be sure lights are turned off, and doors shut and locked securely.

My advice to prospective sellers of their homes is this:

Don't let anyone enter your home unless someone is there!

Opposition To Nazi Membership 'Mindless'

The mindless aspersions directed against comrade Sandra Silva because of her membership in the National Socialist White People's Party, while an employee of the San Francisco Police Department, typify the impotent mentality of the un-American mind. To such individuals, I say that the accuracy of their reasoning is in inverse proportion to their wisdom and serves to demonstrate their blatant disregard for the constitutional rights of an American citizen.

Comrade Silva embodies the best of the white race and, for this reason, she elicits feelings of justifiable inferiority in those hulks of humanity to whom racial superiority is an utter impossibility in life. This 20-year old National Socialist is, indeed, a tribute to the immortal doctrine of Adolf Hitler and a credit to the ranks of the NSWPP.

The fact that she and the multitude of American youth champion the cause of our movement and embrace the principles of Nazi ideology is proof positive that "Hitler is the future!"

Felson Supports Collective Bargaining

In response to your editorial of May 7 I wish to state my support of AB 1243, the Assembly bill which would offer collective bargaining to public employees. I do not feel one is less than a human being because he works for a public entity. As citizens we need intelligent, effective, efficient public employees. If we are to have those kinds of persons working in our behalf we must expect to offer them opportunities available to employees in private industry. I feel AB 1243 is a well-drawn bill, fair to employees as well as to public employers.

I believe the concern of most citizens is not so much with collective bargaining but with the problem of a strike by public employees. While the bill does provide for the rights to strike by employees or to lockout by employers, it specifies a series of responsible procedures necessary prior to a strike vote, including fact-finding and mediation. It also provides for injunctive relief, in the event of a strike, which may be brought by an injured citizen or by either party to the dispute.

Since your editorial singled out the teacher organizations as a party to the issue, I would also like to comment on that particular aspect. I do support the right of teachers to bargain collectively. As a parent as well as a candidate for the Ninth Assembly District seat, my primary concern is not collective bargaining but tenure . . .

I do not propose to trade the present tenure system for a collective bargaining contract which would simply substitute seniority rights for tenure. I would propose a change in tenure to include provisions whereby teachers themselves would participate with administrators in the regular review of the suitability and adequacy . . .

CAPITOL QUIPS

Imagine the confusion of a man from Mars who lands in Washington, says "Take me to your leader," and is informed we don't have one.

The suspicion persists that when Henry Kissinger reports "progress" in the Middle East, he really means he wishes he were making some.

The hard-core Nixon people won't be satisfied with the TV news coverage until the networks get some unbiased commentators like David and Julie Eisenhower.

Strip Mining Bill Passes — But Not What It's Labeled

WASHINGTON — Other House committees are busy, too. As I write, the Interior Committee is preparing to report out a bill that will be hailed by some interested parties as a major victory for the protection of the American land.

It is a strip-mining "control" bill. After years of false starts, it appears that a measure with that sobriquet is on its way to becoming law this summer.

On its face, this must be a wonderful event. Anyone who does not know by now of the terrible, widespread damage wrought by stripping in the hills of Appalachia and the Ohio Valley has neither been reading nor traveling. And the square mileage of territory to be ravaged by stripping in the West, where the effort has barely begun, will make that on this side of the Mississippi seem minor by comparison.

Anything that sets out to control this destruction, to force mining interests to minimize damage and turn to underground production instead, will be a milestone long overdue. But this bill is not it.

ANY CONGRESSMAN who will have to vote on it, or citizen preparing to cheer for it, should realize that if it is enacted, the stripping of the land will not be slowed down but speeded up. For more than three years coal operators will race to tear out all they can before somewhat stricter standards come into effect.

Even then, the bill would place eventual enforcement mainly in the hands of the states, which up to now have done a miserable job of regulation. And principal federal supervision would come through the Interior Department, whose historical goal has been to squeeze more production out of the land, rather than the Environmental Protection Agency.

One of the most noxious results of stripping is that it poisons the streams of whole regions. Yet the House bill would allow strip operators to work directly through watercourses; at other points it is so vague as to state that erosion must be controlled "as effectively as possible."

MY ANALYSIS of the bill is restrained beside that of Rep. Ken Hechler, D-W. Va., who has been inspired by the destruction of his West Virginia district to become Congress' conscience against strip mining. He and Representatives John Seiberling, D-Ohio, and Patsy Mink, D-Hawaii, fought to strengthen the current bill but lost to the Nixon administration and the coal industry.

Hechler calls this measure a "woefully weak compromise, filled with the kind of loopholes the coal and utility lobbyists have written into state strip-mine regulations for the past 30 years."

YET FOR TACTICAL reasons, the industry is wailing that the bill would be a death blow to stripping. Hechler warns that this is to enable the bill's backers to submit it to the House, then to Senate conferees, as "the only reasonable middle course between extremes." When Carl Bagge, president of the National Coal Association, maintains that the bill would allow his industry to bleed to death in two or three years, Hechler insists this is "what I bluntly label a lie."

"Having succeeded in weakening H.R. 11500 up and down the line, Mr. Bagge is now playing the game of painting this faded rose as a skunk cabbage in hopes that he can get the bill weakened even further on the floor of the House," Hechler declares.

The normal course of events would bring the bill to the floor in middle or late June. If passed there, it would go to conference for accommodation with the Senate measure passed last year, which is slightly more solid, mainly in not having the 40-month period of weak "interim" controls. But this year's events so far have not followed any normal course, and there is the prospect that the whole strip control effort could be sidetracked by impeachment proceedings.

For those dedicated to protecting the land, having to start all over again next year would be the only alternative worse than passing the House bill as is.

I-J REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

By PAUL LIBERATORE

Marin Community Video Has First Cable TV Show Ready

Obtaining some preliminary information over the telephone for a story I wrote last August on the nascent Marin Community Video Association, I mistakenly referred to the association as a film group. "Not film, man," Gerry Pearlman corrected. "Videotape!"

The difference quickly became apparent when my eyes were popped open over the prospect for locally originated programs to be pumped into Marin homes via cable television.

Locally originated means programs by Marin people, about Marin people, and for Marin people. Another phrase soon was added to my vocabulary: public access. That means that you out there in televisionland have the opportunity — more than that, the right — to create your own show and have it broadcast in your home county.

According to FCC regulations, however, that right is not effective until March, 1977. In the meantime, Tele-Vue Systems, the county's largest cablecaster, has given Marin Community Video six hours of cable time a month for local-origin shows.

Last summer, the association was just squeezing into a tiny, cinderblock office in Mill Valley. Now, 10 months later, after much sweat, frustration and going without money for extended periods, there is victory and a product.

The assocation's first show, "Marinsights," will be aired at 8 p.m. Wednesday. It will be on Channel 3 for cable subscribers in southern Marin, including Ross, Larkspur, Greenbrae, Corte Madera, Tiburon, Belvedere, Tam Valley, Mill Valley, Marin City, and Sausalito. Other cable TV subscribers in the county will receive it sometime later.

The 90-minute program is billed as a preview of coming attarctions and contains segements from full shows that are to come.

It is a patchwork of people and events intended to demonstrate the opportunity for "the community to talk to itself" over the tube, explains film director John Korty in an opening sequence. Incidentally, Korty, an association director, has been nominated for 12 Emmies, the TV industry equivalent of the Oscar, for his "Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman."

"The program is not to show our talents," Korty goes on, "but what you can do."

I have seen parts of it and what I have seen is super. There are musical segments, including singers Don and Pilar harmonizing on "Eat Out Often" in the living room of their San Anselmo home; students from Ali Akbar College, the Tam High Gospel Choir, the Marin Symphony, and rock unit Shadowfax.

Also included are excerpts varying from meetings of local government bodies (supervisors, planners and Corte Madera Council), to an afternoon with joggers at the Tam High track.

There are snippets from the College of Marin production of "The Boyfriend" and a trip through changing Sausalito with David Lent.

Videographers are the irrepressible Gerry Pearlman and Martha Freebairn-Smith, Korty, Lent, Bonnie Russell, Allan Schwartz, Paul Becker, Sally Pyne, Richard Harkness, Burt Arnowitz, Roland Smith, and Robert Dolphin.

THERE IS A LONG way to go. You can't do much with one $3,000 grant. And the narrow office at 21A Corte Madera Avenue gets smaller with equipment in it. But, according to the above folks:

"In beginning now to utilize this new technology and to inform others throughout the county, Marin Community Video is working toward a future where high quality local origin programming will offer Marin residents a genuine alternative to what is presently available on television." To that, I say, good luck, good work, and amen.

Hiccup 'Cures' Worse Than Hiccups Themselves

By ROB TREICHLER

If there's one thing worse than an unceasing case of hiccups, it's the cures "guaranteed to work every time" that will be inflicted on you by all who hear of your problem.

"Scare the victim," they say. Might stop his heart, and that generally stops the hiccups. Drastic, but effective.

"Hold a cat over your head for five minutes." You may discover how long it takes to bleed to death from severely scratched forearms along with a new hiccup cure.

"Drink water while upside down." My nose is too funnel-shaped for this one, and I do not know the cure for self inflicted drowning.

"Hold your breath and drink something while counting to 10 (or 20 or 387)." First thing that happens after you put down the glass is you hiccup water all over the place. Hopefully, all over the "friend" who prescribed the "cure."

Breathe in and out of a paper bag. Raise your arms over the head and hold the breath. Exhale as much as you can, and hold that position as long as you can. Or turn blue, whichever comes first, I would guess.

NOT MUCH IS KNOWN about the hiccup, or hiccough, including how to spell it. Webster's squarely straddles the issue and gives both spellings. It's defined as a spasmodic inspiration with closure of the glottis, producing a peculiar sound. Webster's doesn't tell what causes it, or how to make it go away. Don't you feel better already?

I have a personal theory that a hiccup repressed will result in one of double magnitude at the next regular interval. Therefore, a person foolish enough to ward off six or seven in a row is flirting with the possibility of whiplash of the Adam's apple, a dislocated larynx, or possibly a spontaneous tracheotomy by blowout. Hiccups, like fermenting home brew, should not be bottled up tightly.

Only thing worse than catching hiccups is the places hiccups catch you. Crowded elevators. In church. Weddings. Funerals. Drinking Seven-up. (That's how it got it's name!) In the dentist's chair.

It is at times like these when a sure cure for the malady is sincerely wished for, and when repressive efforts are most fervently applied. And you find how hopeless they really are as cures.

A hiccup is like a mid-sentence semicolon; generally unexpected, it can't be ignored; it breaks completely your stride and timing.

PERHAPS THE WAY to handle hiccups is to just enjoy them or attempt to enjoy them, while they last. Most "cures" generally treat me worse than the curse and hiccups go away quickest when they are no longer thought about or treated as a malady.

What to think about while attempting to enjoy the hiccups: "There should be another one in about 10 seconds. Is there any rhythm or timing to these things? What is the taste of a hiccup? How many uninterrupted breaths between hiccups? Do they occur only during inhaling, or while exhaling as well? Can the volume be voluntarily controlled? Can they be recreated later at will?"

Concentrate on enjoying the hiccup, like you would a symphony or a sunset, and the inevitable will occur; just as you get the hang of the thing, and start to enjoy it, it will go away.

Incidentally, Korty, an association director, has been nominated for 12 Emmies, the TV industry equivalent of the Oscar, for his "Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman."

"The program is not to show our talents," Korty goes on, "but what you can do."

I have seen parts of it and what I have seen is super. There are musical segments, including singers Don and Pilar harmonizing on "Eat Out Often" in the living room of their San Anselmo home; students from Ali Akbar College, the Tam High Gospel Choir, the Marin Symphony, and rock unit Shadowfax.

Also included are excerpts varying from meetings of local government bodies (supervisors, planners and Corte Madera Council), to an afternoon with joggers at the Tam High track.

There are snippets from the College of Marin production of "The Boyfriend" and a trip through changing Sausalito with David Lent.

Videographers are the irrepressible Gerry Pearlman and Martha Freebairn-Smith, Korty, Lent, Bonnie Russell, Allan Schwartz, Paul Becker, Sally Pyne, Richard Harkness, Burt Arnowitz, Roland Smith, and Robert Dolphin.

THERE IS A LONG way to go. You can't do much with one $3,000 grant. And the narrow office at 21A Corte Madera Avenue gets smaller with equipment in it. But, according to the above folks:

"In beginning now to utilize this new technology and to inform others throughout the county, Marin Community Video is working toward a future where high quality local origin programming will offer Marin residents a genuine alternative to what is presently available on television." To that, I say, good luck, good work, and amen.

THE MIND I LIVE IN

Hiccup 'Cures' Worse Than Hiccups Themselves

By ROB TREICHLER

If there's one thing worse than an unceasing case of hiccups, it's the cures "guaranteed to work every time" that will be inflicted on you by all who hear of your problem.

"Scare the victim," they say. Might stop his heart, and that generally stops the hiccups. Drastic, but effective.

"Hold a cat over your head for five minutes." You may discover how long it takes to bleed to death from severely scratched forearms along with a new hiccup cure.

"Drink water while upside down." My nose is too funnel-shaped for this one, and I do not know the cure for self inflicted drowning.

"Hold your breath and drink something while counting to 10 (or 20 or 387)." First thing that happens after you put down the glass is you hiccup water all over the place. Hopefully, all over the "friend" who prescribed the "cure."

Breathe in and out of a paper bag. Raise your arms over the head and hold the breath. Exhale as much as you can, and hold that position as long as you can. Or turn blue, whichever comes first, I would guess.

NOT MUCH IS KNOWN about the hiccup, or hiccough, including how to spell it. Webster's squarely straddles the issue and gives both spellings. It's defined as a spasmodic inspiration with closure of the glottis, producing a peculiar sound. Webster's doesn't tell what causes it, or how to make it go away. Don't you feel better already?

I have a personal theory that a hiccup repressed will result in one of double magnitude at the next regular interval. Therefore, a person foolish enough to ward off six or seven in a row is flirting with the possibility of whiplash of the Adam's apple, a dislocated larynx, or possibly a spontaneous tracheotomy by blowout. Hiccups, like fermenting home brew, should not be bottled up tightly.

Only thing worse than catching hiccups is the places hiccups catch you. Crowded elevators. In church. Weddings. Funerals. Drinking Seven-up. (That's how it got it's name!) In the dentist's chair.

It is at times like these when a sure cure for the malady is sincerely wished for, and when repressive efforts are most fervently applied. And you find how hopeless they really are as cures.

A hiccup is like a mid-sentence semicolon; generally unexpected, it can't be ignored; it breaks completely your stride and timing.

PERHAPS THE WAY to handle hiccups is to just enjoy them or attempt to enjoy them, while they last. Most "cures" generally treat me worse than the curse and hiccups go away quickest when they are no longer thought about or treated as a malady.

What to think about while attempting to enjoy the hiccups: "There should be another one in about 10 seconds. Is there any rhythm or timing to these things? What is the taste of a hiccup? How many uninterrupted breaths between hiccups? Do they occur only during inhaling, or while exhaling as well? Can the volume be voluntarily controlled? Can they be recreated later at will?"

Concentrate on enjoying the hiccup, like you would a symphony or a sunset, and the inevitable will occur; just as you get the hang of the thing, and start to enjoy it, it will go away.

Scholarships Dinner Slated

The Colleges of Marin Foundation will precede its annual scholarship awards program with a 10th anniversary dinner at 6:30 p.m. Monday, according to Dick Corrick, dinner chairman.

The dinner in the faculty lounge at the Kentfield campus will host the foundation's past presidents and first board of directors. In the decade it has been operating the foundation, it has raised thousands of dollars for scholarships and loans to students at College of Marin and more recently Indian Valley Colleges.

The dinner will be followed at 8 p.m. by scholarship awards program, Corrick said.

$250 Is Donated To Anniversary Fund

The Tiburon Peninsula Chamber of Commerce will donate $250 to the Tiburon Anniversary Committee for use in celebrations being planned for the city's 10th birthday in June.

Chamber president Charles Patterson said that the group also agreed Tuesday to work on store window displays with an anniversary theme.

Convict Wins Permission To Attend Funeral

SOLEDAD (UPI) — A convict was given permission yesterday to attend the funeral of his 16-year-old son, who died without knowing his father had paid him a last visit.

State Correction Director Raymond Procunier granted the furlough to Philip Macchiarella, 35, to attend the funeral Saturday of his son Leonard, who died Tuesday of a rare kidney disease at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco.

The permission came from Procunier after the warden's office at the California Training Facility rejected Macchiarella's appeal for the trip.

Before Leonard died, he told otter relatives that he wanted to see his father. Prison officials granted the request, but by the time Macchiarella arrived at his son's bedside, the boy had slipped into a coma.

Roth Criticizes Front-Runners For Donations From Lobbyists

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Millionaire William Matson Roth of Ross, who is running for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, yesterday criticized the three frontrunners for accepting about $100,000 each from corporations and lobbyists.

He told a news conference that Secretary of State Edmund G. Brown Jr. accepted $105,130, Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti $29,869 and San Francisco Mayor Joseph Alioto $94,143.

Terming the amounts "rather obscene," Roth said the reliance on corporate campaign contributions is one of the reasons state governmental agencies "are dominated by the very commercial interests they are supposed to regulate and monitor."

Roth's campaign, which is approaching the $1 million level, is financed mainly with his and his family's money.

Roth's said Moretti has accepted large sums from prepaid health plans which have contracts. with the state; Brown has received substanial funds from developers and savings and loans; and Alioto has taken money from firms which do business with the city of San Francisco.

Roth said he supported Prop. 9, the political reform initiative. But he added additional reforms were needed including a ban on corporate contributions and public financing of political campaigns.

Roth said Moretti had accepted a total of $4,000 in campaign contributions from three perpaid health care organizations that have contracts with the state. They were Western Medical Group, California Medical Group and Omni-Rx Health Systems.

He also said the California Association of Nursing Homes had contributed $5,000 to Moretti and Marion Laboratories of Kansas City another $6,000.

"Mr. Roth is grasping at straws," Moretti told a separate news conference.

"To say that I have somehow sold out to health care plans for those kinds of contributions is ridiculous," Moretti snapped, adding he planned to spend about $1.2 million in the primary election.

"I have no involvement with any health care plans at all, no ownership, no interest, no nothing," Moretti said.

Early American, or "Colonial" Furniture actually arose during two periods; before the American Revolution (1620 to 1795) and after, (1795 - 1847). In the pre-revolutionary period, the colonists' designs were fashioned after the styles of Chippendale and Louis XIV of France, with many influences from the Dutch. However, Colonial styles were plainer and often sturdier than the foreign models. After the Revolution, furniture designs in America turned away from British styles and favored French designs. Decoration included such motifs as the acanthus leaf, lyres, pineapples, winged griffin feet, lion and bear claws. The "broken arch" as seen in our illustration was widely used. # SECOND CENTURY SAN RAFAEL LOOKS AHEAD

DAILY Independent Journal Est. 1861
SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY
SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, MAY 17, 1974

San Rafael 100th Anniversary Gala To Last 10 Days

The most colorful celebration in San Rafael's 100 years will get underway tonight with 10 days of events scheduled in observance of the city's Centennial birthday.

The longest parade in Northern California history, a musical review, a huge country fair, luncheons, a costume ball, concerts, open houses, art exhibits, church services and tours are planned.

Thousands of San Rafael's residents, from school children to the oldest citizens, will participate in pageantry designed to "instill in each and everyone a sense of pride and a knowledge of the history of the city in which he lives," according to chairman Thomas F. Keating.

The city is decked out with blue and gold Centennial signs, hundreds of other residents are wearing Centennial buttons, and specially-minted Centennial coins are jingling in pockets.

Men and women alike have been busy for weeks preparing costumes harking back to bygone days and school children have been studying, dramatizing and illustrating the history of their hometown.

The curtain will go up at 8:30 p.m. today, when a cast of 130 will sing out the history of the city in a musical review, "Jubilee," at San Rafael High School auditorium.

The original show, written by Paul and Valerie McMullen and directed by Valda Carter, is being staged by a technical crew of 70.

A 17-piece orchestra will accompany the more than 20 Broadway-type numbers in the "not-so-reverent" account of the city's history from Mission days to the present. "Jubilee" will be repeated Sunday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and next Friday.

Tomorrow, the first full day of Centennial events, will see the dedication of the city's new Beach Park on the San Rafael Canal at 11:30 a.m. The senior citizens' art show will open at noon at Whistlestop, and the film, "San Rafael Illustrated," will be premiered at 1 p.m. at the Montecito Theater. (The film was made by classes at Terra Linda and San Rafael high schools.)

On Sunday, the Missa Viscaina, a 19th Century Mass written by one of the Franciscan friars who founded the Mission San Rafael Arcangel in 1817, will be sung at 10:30 a.m. at St. Raphael's Church.

Throughout next week, students and adults will view landmarks of the past and present. More than 3,500 youngsters will participate in "Centennial Trails," touring Mission San Rafael Arcangel, the Marin County historical museum, the Dixie Schoolhouse and the Miwok Archaeological Preserve as well as modern civic facilities.

The Alma, a hay scow-schooner which carried cargoes to San Rafael during the 1890s will be moored at the San Rafael Yacht Club and open to the public from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. each day.

There will be historical displays at the Marin County Library at Civic Center, San Rafael Library and the Archbishop Alemany Library at Dominican College.

Monday will mark the beginning of noon concerts at Northgate and adjacent to Courthouse Square on A Street, with choirs, orchestras, bands and jazz ensembles from the San Rafael and Dixie school districts performing daily through Friday.

At 8 p.m. Monday, musicians from schools in the San Rafael district, with a guest choir from San Domenico School will present their annual music festival at 8 p.m. in the Marin Veterans' Memorial Building.

Featured works will be the "The San Rafael Carnival Souvenir March," first performed in 1908, and a new choral selection, commissioned for the Centennial and composed by Earl Zindars with lyrics by Paul McMullen.

As part of the senior citizens' observance of the Centennial, their annual awards luncheon will be held from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday at the Marin Veterans' Memorial Building.

On Thursday, San Rafael's oldest residents will be honored at a "Pioneer Evening" champagne reception held at and sponsored by the San Rafael Improvement Club.

Facelift For Century-Old City

By NELS JOHNSON

The City of San Rafael, blemished by haphazard development during its first 100 years, is going to get a facelift.

And many municipal leaders are convinced that it will take major surgery to remove the blight that mars portions of the city's central business district.

Redevelopment, an urban renewal process, was embraced by city leaders two years ago as a way to reverse the economic decay plaguing the downtown area.

Unlike the frantic pace that accompanied planning decisions and development of the past, city officials are proceeding with ambitious redevelopment plans with extreme caution.

Officials are proceeding so cautiously, in fact, that more than two years after the San Rafael Redevelopment Agency was created, the form of renovation is still uncertain.

The city is firmly committed to a downtown mall on Fourth Street near Courthouse Square. And the city's first redevelopment project — a community recreational center on B Street, will be erected this summer.

But what about the remainder of the redevelopment area? The broad tract encompasses 2,000 parcels in the downtown, along Francisco Boulevard and in East San Rafael, stretching roughly from Fourth and H streets in the west to Point

WHERE IT ALL BEGAN

It was April 9, 1874 when five men gathered in a small room in this modest building to plan a city. Incorporation papers were signed less than two months later — on May 25 — and San Rafael was born. This week, as the city celebrates its 100th birthday, a portrait of its first city hall, located above a saloon at the corner of Fourth and C streets, decorates the cover of the San Rafael Centennial souvenir program.

San Rafael 100th Anniversary Gala To Last 10 Days

The most colorful celebration in San Rafael's 100 years will get underway tonight with 10 days of events scheduled in observance of the city's Centennial birthday.

The longest parade in Northern California history, a musical review, a huge country fair, luncheons, a costume ball, concerts, open houses, art exhibits, church services and tours are planned.

Thousands of San Rafael's residents, from school children to the oldest citizens, will participate in pageantry designed to "instill in each and everyone a sense of pride and a knowledge of the history of the city in which he lives," according to chairman Thomas F. Keating.

The city is decked out with blue and gold Centennial signs, hundreds of other residents are wearing Centennial buttons, and specially-minted Centennial coins are jingling in pockets.

Men and women alike have been busy for weeks preparing costumes harking back to bygone days and school children have been studying, dramatizing and illustrating the history of their hometown.

The curtain will go up at 8:30 p.m. today, when a cast of 130 will sing out the history of the city in a musical review, "Jubilee," at San Rafael High School auditorium.

The original show, written by Paul and Valerie McMullen and directed by Valda Carter, is being staged by a technical crew of 70.

A 17-piece orchestra will accompany the more than 20 Broadway-type numbers in the "not-so-reverent" account of the city's history from Mission days to the present. "Jubilee" will be repeated Sunday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and next Friday.

Tomorrow, the first full day of Centennial events, will see the dedication of the city's new Beach Park on the San Rafael Canal at 11:30 a.m. The senior citizens' art show will open at noon at Whistlestop, and the film, "San Rafael Illustrated," will be premiered at 1 p.m. at the Montecito Theater. (The film was made by classes at Terra Linda and San Rafael high schools.)

On Sunday, the Missa Viscaina, a 19th Century Mass written by one of the Franciscan friars who founded the Mission San Rafael Arcangel in 1817, will be sung at 10:30 a.m. at St. Raphael's Church.

Throughout next week, students and adults will view landmarks of the past and present. More than 3,500 youngsters will participate in "Centennial Trails," touring Mission San Rafael Arcangel, the Marin County historical museum, the Dixie Schoolhouse and the Miwok Archaeological Preserve as well as modern civic facilities.

The Alma, a hay scow-schooner which carried cargoes to San Rafael during the 1890s will be moored at the San Rafael Yacht Club and open to the public from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. each day.

There will be historical displays at the Marin County Library at Civic Center, San Rafael Library and the Archbishop Alemany Library at Dominican College.

Monday will mark the beginning of noon concerts at Northgate and adjacent to Courthouse Square on A Street, with choirs, orchestras, bands and jazz ensembles from the San Rafael and Dixie school districts performing daily through Friday.

At 8 p.m. Monday, musicians from schools in the San Rafael district, with a guest choir from San Domenico School will present their annual music festival at 8 p.m. in the Marin Veterans' Memorial Building.

Featured works will be the "The San Rafael Carnival Souvenir March," first performed in 1908, and a new choral selection, commissioned for the Centennial and composed by Earl Zindars with lyrics by Paul McMullen.

As part of the senior citizens' observance of the Centennial, their annual awards luncheon will be held from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday at the Marin Veterans' Memorial Building.

On Thursday, San Rafael's oldest residents will be honored at a "Pioneer Evening" champagne reception held at and sponsored by the San Rafael Improvement Club.

"We're not certain. Everything depends on the redevelopment master plan," said William J. Bielser, city manager and executive director of the San Rafael Redevelopment Agency.

The plan is being formulated by the San Francisco firm of Rockrise, Odermatt, Mountjoy and Amis. Another consulting firm, Kaiser-Marsten Associates, is preparing an economic analysis of the redevelopment area.

The two firms, to a large degree, are mapping the future of the city.

Will downtown San Rafael be razed in favor of pedestrian malls, park plazas and outdoor cafes? Will the central city become a densely populated urban village complete with small specialty shops and teeming residential complexes?

City councilmen, acting as redevelopment agency directors, will be confronted with these kinds of questions when consultants air their reports late in the summer.

A notion of the kinds of activities envisioned under redevelopment may be culled from the city's interim redevelopment plan, approved despite stiff opposition from the county's legal staff in November, 1972.

According to that plan, "the central objective of (redevelopment) is to renew and create economic stimulation within this area where government, business and residential activities focus, where people of the city gather to conduct their affairs, and reestablish the image and awareness of this area as the business and commercial center of San Rafael and Marin County."

The plan notes the aim of redevelopment is to spark economic growth within the redevelopment area and says a redevelopment agency can freeze the current assessed valuation level within redevelopment boundaries and use future increases for self-financing.

It is this controversial method of tax incremental financing that sparked an extended battle with the county and other taxing agencies, ending only when the city pledged to limit the program to $6 million over seven years, and agreed to repay noncity agencies for some revenue siphoned off.)

The interim plan cites general redevelopment objectives like beautification, improving traffic flow and providing for new businesses, and urges upgrading of Fourth Street, providing downtown parking, undergrounding Francisco Boulevard utilities, improving the San Rafael Canal and creation of a shoreline park in East San Rafael.

Bielser said, however, that the interim plan may be "modified" or even "thrown out entirely" by the city council, and noted in any event, the interim plan will be replaced by the master plan now being prepared.

For the present, "all is quiet" on the redevelopment front, Bielser claimed, saying only one private redevelopment proposal is currently "in the works."

This project, a $5 million Gemco department complex proposed for 10 acres near Marin Motor Movies, would include a supermarket and department stores. "We don't know anymore about it yet; we really need the master plan before we can even consider or accept such proposals," he said.

On May 25, more than 100 booths selling foods to please a variety of palates, handcrafts, games and memorabilia will be featured at the Centennial Fair, to be held at Forest Meadows on the Dominican College from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The ascension of the hot-air balloom Aquistapace will take place at 11:30 a.m. during the free country fair.

That evening, revelers will gather for the Centennial Ball, beginning at 8:30 p.m. at the Marin Veterans' Memorial Building.

Ernie Hecksher and his orchestra will play for dancers, who will attend either in earlyday costumes or modern dress.

The closing day of the Centennial, May 26, will begin at noon, when pastors of six San Rafael churches will participate in a Centennial Mass of Thanksgiving on the steps of Mission San Rafael Arcangel.

At 1 p.m. a three-hour parade will begin at Fourth and E streets, then march up Fourth to the sounds of marching units, military and civic bands, bell corps, bagpipers and horses' hooves.

More than 200 entrants, including floats and horse-drawn surreys, will pass past a reviewing stand at Courthouse Square and end up on the grounds of San Rafael High School.

More open air entertainment, a regatta of decorated boats on the San Rafael Canal, will start at the San Rafael Yacht Club at 4:30 p.m.

The 10-day Centennial will come to an official close with a final burst of fireworks, which will be touched off along the waterfront in East San Rafael at 9 p.m.

CANAL AREA — Another example of poor planning, or perhaps a lack of planning, is the San Rafael Canal area, which in places more resembles an old mining town than part of a progressive and growing city.

PLANNING DISASTER — This view of Francisco Boulevard, looking east, with its clutter of signs and unsightly poles, is a good example of the mistakes in planning San Rafael is trying to avoid in the future.

Emphasis Turns To Good Planning

By NELS JOHNSON

The San Rafael Planning Commission, in a freewheeling study session last May, sat down to review its own planning functions and staff performance.

Among many proposals fielded at that meeting — which came in the wake of a city council election in which candidates most critical of city planning won by large margins — was a suggestion by Commissioner James Dougan that the agency form a "mistake review committee' to probe municipal planning errors.

Dougan's suggestion was quickly dashed by colleagues. Said one: "We can't review all our mistakes, because there would be too many."

The lack of planning foresight in San Rafael is well documented in the canal area, along Francisco Boulevard and in the Montecito shopping center.

The list of planning errors grew steadily until recent years when a new wave of citizen interest spurred city hall to take a hard look at the mistakes of the past, and try to prevent similar ones in the future.

WILLIAM J. BIELSER
San Rafael manager

Much has been done to ensure good planning in the last two years alone, as the complexion of city agencies has changed and a new, activist city administration has replaced the easy-going officialdom of the past.

"In the last two years, San Rafael has witnessed a substantial change in direction and attitude, at the community level, the council level and the staff level," according to William J. Bielser, the 31-year-old city manager hired in January of 1973.

"The major issue appears to be with how land is used," the 31-year-old Bielser noted. "This includes the quality of development, the degree of development, and what our citizens feel about development of the physical characteristics of our city."

Bielser said measures approved over the last two years that signal a new era in comprehensive land use planning in San Rafael include:

1. A moratorium on major development approved in June, 1972, which has had the effect of slowing construction until the city general plan is completed.

2. A $2.25 million open space bond issue endorsed by voters in September, 1972.

3. A site development ordinance that requires city approval of grading, drainage, slope and other engineering matters before development may proceed.

4. An ordinance which requires apartment houses to provide more parking.

5. A regulation requiring developers to provide curbs, gutters, sidewalks and storm sewers.

6. A design and environmental review procedure requiring official scrutiny of the landscaping and architecture of development.

7. An ordinance requiring landowners to provide buyers with building inspection reports on the property to be sold.

8. A regulation that sets strict standards for razing buildings and requires city approval before any structure deemed historically or architecturally significant is demolished.

9. A ban on conversion of apartment units to condominiums.

Measures aimed at sparking better development of San Rafael have been accompanied by new taxes that require developers to pay more for development privileges.

The city has in recent years approved a bedroom tax on residential construction, a tax on new industrial and commercial construction, and boosted fees for municipal services required by new construction, including building inspection services.

Just as city code has changed, so has the structure of city government.

Citizen participation in city affairs has mushroomed over the last year as citizen committees on the general plan, the San Rafael Canal, open space, redevelopment, and others matters have been appointed by the city council.

And councilmen Jack G. Nixon, Lawrence Mulryan and John A. Miskimen, who have embraced the committee system of getting things done, last March voted to expand the parks and recreation commission from five to seven members. The move was made to increase citizen participation in municipal affairs.

In a parallel development, Bielser said the city administration has been streamlined and strengthened. The public works department has been reorganized, as has the city's financial operation.

And to add to the efficiency of elected and appointed bodies, the staff has taken over the handlinlg of many trivial items which once had to go before the various commissions or city council.

San Rafael's recent past, then, has been marked by new laws to foster better development, new taxes to boost city coffers; citizen participation to provide new ideas, and a streamlined, more efficient internal government.

The aim of all this is to achieve better planning, according to Bielser, who as city manager is at the hub of the new deal at city hall.

Bielser has a wide background in municipal government. He previously served on the administrative staffs of three city governments — San Mateo, Palo Alto and Covina.

His experience includes such diverse activities as planning a municipal zoo and working for the AFL-CIO as a labor consultant for municipal employees.

He is credited with suggesting redevelopment as the to pump new life into the sagging economy of downtown San Rafael.

Bielser, who shares credit for the changing perspective at city hall with citizens and councilmen, said redevelopment and the city's emerging general plan hold the keys to the future of San Rafael.

"Redevelopment and the new plan signal a new era in city history," he said, adding that the city's destiny will be shaped by comprehensive planning.

And the outlook is bright, according to the city manager, despite or perhaps because of the grim reminders of haphazard planning that lace the first 100 years of city history.

Things Looking Up At Last For San Rafael Canal Area

Waterway Has Played Part In City's Past

By GEORGE NEVIN

It's called the orphan of San Rafael by some, the back door of the city by others.

Its past goes back to the early days of San Rafael, with connections to Mission San Rafael Archangel and Marin's prestatehood days.

But it is the future of the San Rafael Canal that is the topic of much discussion by city officials, boat owners, local businessmen and residents of East San Rafael.

After years of inaction by the city and steady deterioration of the canal itself, plans for a better future for the waterway are taking shape at last.

Citizens groups have been formed to work with city officials to define the canal's problems and potential. City consultants have proposed a program to convert the area back into a community asset. And San Rafael has pledged $1.1 million in redevelopment funds for various canal projects, including park development.

At the heart of the canal's brightening future is a new spirit of cooperation among residents, boaters, businessmen and city officials, a spirit inspired by the realization that the waterway can be a tremendous asset to San Rafael.

One of the first groups to recognize the canal's worth was the San Rafael Chamber of Commerce's canal development committee. Headed by Eugene F. Sweeney, the group has prodded residents to beautify canalside lots and urged city officials to act to reduce canal flooding and pollution.

The committee has solicited funds for studies of pollution in the waterway, supported cleanup efforts along its banks and asked the state to dredge the canal every five years to combat siltation.

Some members of the chamber group also serve on the San Rafael Canal Advisory Committee, a citizens' group formed last year by the city council. The 25-member committee has been asked to recommend ways to improve the waterway.

The committee is exploring the canal's worth as a recreational resource, looking for ways to finance canal improvements and seeking new uses for canalside land.

There is no doubt that the canal is attracting more attention than it has received in years. Still another organization — The Neighborhood Action League — is eyeing the canal's vast recreational potential.

And local schools have taken a new interest in the waterways. The San Rafael High School science department, for example, is conducting an continuing series of pollution tests in the canal.

The San Rafael city administration, as well as the city council, has acknowledged the canal's importance, describing it as "a community asset of inestimable potential."

At least part of this potential will be realized under the city's ambitious redevelopment program, which makes canal improvement a top priority. Some $1.1 million in redevelopment funds are proposed for beautification, a canal path and canal area parks. Redevelopment, too, will allow the city to assemble poorly shaped parcles along the canal and make them available for new uses.

As if to highlight the new concern for the canal, the city's newest municipal park — tiny Beach Park — is located on canal banks opposite the Montecito shopping center. It is an unusual facility comprised of picnic tables and palm trees built on tons of imported sand.

The city is also attempting to settle longtime boundary disputes along the canal resulting from an erroneous 1872 land survey of the channel's location. A $36,000 municipal survey of the canal was completed last summer, and the city must now work with the state Lands Commission to help canal property owners clear title to their land.

BLIGHTED WATERWAY — Seen from San Rafael's canal is overpowered by a hodgepodge of businesses, industry and large apartment houses. But recently community groups, realizing the tremendous recreational potential of the waterway, have begun to explore ways to reverse the damage caused by a century of haphazard development.

City general plan consultants also have seen the canal's value and have recommended more public access to the channel and conversion of the canal back to recreational uses.

"It would be a grave mistake not to attempt to recapture the substantial public values associated with the canal, and to permit the continued existence of high intensity land uses adjacent to the Canal" the city's preliminary general play says.

The plan also states that: "The long term conversion program . . . should be geared to making the canal a predominantly low intensity water-oriented recreational and open space area. Property should be purchased as it becomes available and the useful life of (current) structurs ends."

If the city council endorses the canal portion of the plan, and if citizens' groups, city officials and local businessmen continue in a spirit of cooperation, the San Rafael Canal in a few years could be rid of its tacky appearance.

Right now it is definitely uninspiring — a petroleum-polluted stream used by pleasure boaters but few others, amid a mass of rotting piers and wharfs and a solid phalanx of buildings which cut off access and scenic vistas.

Despite brightening prospects, the future of the canal is still uncertain. Much, however, is known about the channel's past.

Long before Spanish settlers arrived in Marin, much of what now is East San Rafael's lowlands were salt marshes, broken by meandering sloughs and inlets from San Francisco Bay.

Future Bright For Canal Area

Rafael Archangel in 1817, they used the largest of these channels as a natural waterway for conveying supplies.

They built a wharf near the present location of Second and A streets and hauled supplies to the mission. Another wharf went up at First and C streets.

As time passed and a village grew up around the mission, swarms of small craft — sloops, skiffs and Indian tule boats — navigated the wandering sloughs to load and unload cargo at these docks and others like them scattered along what was known as Estero de San Rafael de Aguanni.

Cattle shipping was an important activity along the canal. Long-horned Spanish steers, roaming wild through the hills of Marin, were rounded up, slaughtered at a wharf and shipped to San Francisco, where they fetched $25 per head.

An early settler, Joseph B. Rice, began shipping bricks to San Francisco from brickyards scattered throughout Marin. He built a dock along the creek near what is now San Rafael High School.

Until the 1890s, nothing was done to improve the canal's natural channel. Tidal waters of the bay ebbed and flowed through the channel from its mouth past Irwin Street to A Street, then turned southwest through a marsh to First and C streets. From there, the early head of navigation, the channel took the form of a creek bed which headed almost due west.

Specially built boats called hay scows came upstream to unload hay for livestock feed. These flat-bottomed craft, broad and low, were rigged to carry a sail in their trips across the bay, then would be pulled up the canal, barge-like, by horses.

Through the 1930s and even later, much of the town's supplies were arriving by water and using the numerous wharfs which sprang up.

It was a quirk of long-distance freight rates that these materials could be shipped more cheaply by water than by rail. The goods would arrive at East Bay ports by rail, be transferred to boats and carried across the bay to San Rafael.

The last heavy commercial use of the canal ended in the 1950s. The advent of the Golden Gate Bridge and later the Richmond-San Rafael Bridge, coupled with increasing reliance on trucks for cargo shipping, spelled the end of the canal's role in commercial development and the beginning of what today is its primary use — recreation.

Throughout its history, townspeople had used the San Rafael Canal as a swimming hole. An open-air bathing area near the present location of C and First streets was much in favor on hot days long before 1900.

The San Rafael Salt Water Swimming Baths, on the canal, just south of the former Greyhound bus station on Third Street, were popular in the early years of this century.

In 1914, the City of San Rafael commissioned a contractor to build a huge, mission-style bathhouse on property bought in 1898 from James L. Flood for $500.

For $31,380 the city had constructed a pre-fabricated steel bathhouse with an oval glass roof to let light in. The structure, 200 feet long and 90 feet wide, enclosed a pool 100 feet by 40 feet, from four to nine feet deep. A 10-foot slide stood at one end of the pool, and a diving board and springboard 30 feet high stood at the other.

In 1915 the mammoth structure opened to the public, and at first it proved very popular. But then use began to lag and the city finally shut the doors in 1929. Later the property was used by the H. C. Little Burner Co.; and the bathhouse burned down in 1949.

To replace it, the San Rafael Lion's Club sometime in the 1930s built what was to be called Lion's Beach on the channel's shores near where San Rafael High stands today. Beach sand was imported and the bathing spot proved popular for a time, but eventually it lost its appeal and the city-owned land on which it was located finally was sold.

During the 30s, pleasure boating began to grow in popularity, sometime late in that decade the City of San Rafel acquired and built a municipal yacht harbor where the Montecito Shopping Center now stands — a prelude to what one man has called "the biggest swindle in San Rafael's history."

The harbor, said city councilman Fred C. Jensen, made San Rafael unique in California. It was the only municipal harbor which was practically in the heart of town.

But the city allowed the harbor to deteriorate until it became a financial burden, and in December 1954 the city council determined to sell it, which it did the next year for $150,500.

This sale launched the political career of Jensen, who had a boat moored in the harbor and ran for the city council on an anti-sale platform. He was swept into office, but too late, he sadly recounts, to stop the deal.

San Rafael attorney Thomas P. Boyd calls the sale "the biggest swindle in the city's history," but he was one of few who fought it at the time.

After World War II, the face of the canal began changing rapidly. Lowlands in East San Rafael were filled and commercial ventures soon lined the canal's banks; land further inland away from the shores began sprouting apartment buildings.

In what is recognized today as a serious planning error, business on the canal, including the Montecito Shopping Center, turned their backs to the waterway.

Forests of pilings and mountains of temporary structures were built, and these, as they deteriorated, have contributed to the decrepit appearance of the canal.

END OF THE LINE — A pleasure craft approaches the end of the navigable portion of the San Rafal Canal. The waterway, which has played such an important role in the city's history, soon may get a facelift to improve its unattractive appearance — if community organizations get their way.

GONE — These petroleum tanks have been removed from the banks of the canal since this photo was taken last year. Their removal is part of a campaign to eliminate industrial uses on the canal and replace them with recreation facilities.

DIM PRESENT — Weathered pilings dot the canal behind the Montecito Shopping Center. In what today is recognized as a serious planning error, businessmen along the canal, including those in the shopping center, built their stores facing away from the waterway. Some of these pilings soon will be replaced by a berth for the city's Sea Scout patrol's shop.

Future Bright For Canal Area

Rafael Archangel in 1817, they used the largest of these channels as a natural waterway for conveying supplies.

They built a wharf near the present location of Second and A streets and hauled supplies to the mission. Another wharf went up at First and C streets.

As time passed and a village grew up around the mission, swarms of small craft — sloops, skiffs and Indian tule boats — navigated the wandering sloughs to load and unload cargo at these docks and others like them scattered along what was known as Estero de San Rafael de Aguanni.

Cattle shipping was an important activity along the canal. Long-horned Spanish steers, roaming wild through the hills of Marin, were rounded up, slaughtered at a wharf and shipped to San Francisco, where they fetched $25 per head.

An early settler, Joseph B. Rice, began shipping bricks to San Francisco from brickyards scattered throughout Marin. He built a dock along the creek near what is now San Rafael High School.

Until the 1890s, nothing was done to improve the canal's natural channel. Tidal waters of the bay ebbed and flowed through the channel from its mouth past Irwin Street to A Street, then turned southwest through a marsh to First and C streets. From there, the early head of navigation, the channel took the form of a creek bed which headed almost due west.

Specially built boats called hay scows came upstream to unload hay for livestock feed. These flat-bottomed craft, broad and low, were rigged to carry a sail in their trips across the bay, then would be pulled up the canal, barge-like, by horses.

Through the 1930s and even later, much of the town's supplies were arriving by water and using the numerous wharfs which sprang up.

It was a quirk of long-distance freight rates that these materials could be shipped more cheaply by water than by rail. The goods would arrive at East Bay ports by rail, be transferred to boats and carried across the bay to San Rafael.

The last heavy commercial use of the canal ended in the 1950s. The advent of the Golden Gate Bridge and later the Richmond-San Rafael Bridge, coupled with increasing reliance on trucks for cargo shipping, spelled the end of the canal's role in commercial development and the beginning of what today is its primary use — recreation.

Throughout its history, townspeople had used the San Rafael Canal as a swimming hole. An open-air bathing area near the present location of C and First streets was much in favor on hot days long before 1900.

The San Rafael Salt Water Swimming Baths, on the canal, just south of the former Greyhound bus station on Third Street, were popular in the early years of this century.

In 1914, the City of San Rafael commissioned a contractor to build a huge, mission-style bathhouse on property bought in 1898 from James L. Flood for $500.

For $31,380 the city had constructed a pre-fabricated steel bathhouse with an oval glass roof to let light in. The structure, 200 feet long and 90 feet wide, enclosed a pool 100 feet by 40 feet, from four to nine feet deep. A 10-foot slide stood at one end of the pool, and a diving board and springboard 30 feet high stood at the other.

LOW INCOME HOUSING

Critical Time Is Approaching

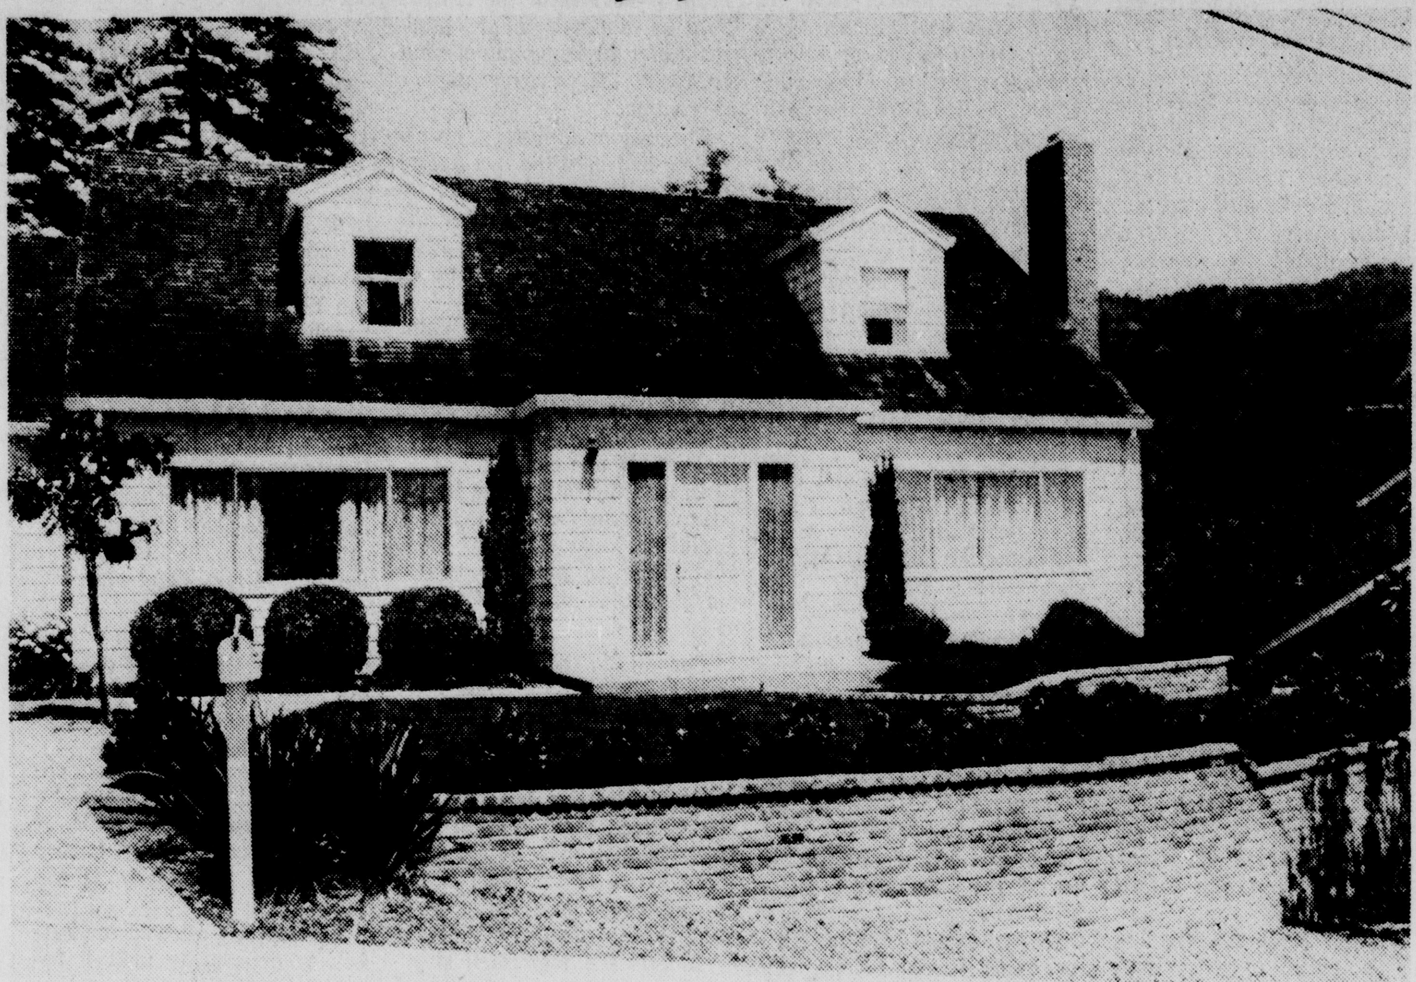
By MARY LEYDECKER



EXCLUSIVE ENCLAVE? — If San Rafael residents are unwilling to pay for low-cost housing, the city is destined to become an enclave of expensive homes, like this one in the Dominican area, according to City Planning Director Herbert G. Hotchner.

LOW-COST — There are many cramped living quarters in San Rafael like these on Fourth Street. The city is faced with the problem of how to provide better housing at a low cost to those who need it. The city's planning director said recently, that "It's time for San Rafael's residents to fish or cut bait."

Are the people of San Rafael willing to pay the price for some low-cost housing in their community or do they want to live in an increasingly expensive, exclusive parklike setting?

The time has come for San Rafael residents to fish or cut bait, according to the city's planning director, Herbert G. Hotchner.

"Where does the real public hang out?" Hotchner asked rhetorically.

He pointed out that the vocal, organized groups of people who appear so often before the city council and planning commission seldom represent the great middle mass of residents.

"Up to 1971, the only organized groups" that spoke out at city meetings were "business oriented," Hotchner said. Then came "another segment that has become vocal," the conservationists.

These groups "have given lip service," at least, to providing housing in San Rafael for those with low and moderate incomes, but Hotchner said now is the time for the entire community to decide if it "is willing to pay the price."

Furthermore, "the public hasn't yet looked at the price," Hotchner said. He explained that "you can't have nice yards, parking, open space and single-family homes" and expect to find any low-cost housing in that mix with today's spiraling costs. "It's a false, wishful, unrealistic dream" to expect low-cost housing if all those other factors are to be met, Hotchner said.

A harbinger of public opinion in San Rafael may have come at a recent hearing on the city's proposed general plan.

"We don't believe it's our social responsibility to provide housing for everyone," said the representative of a homeowners group. He rejected proposals for moderate-cost housing in East San Rfael as a "far-out concept, which we absolutely repudiate."

Another resident, though, said homeowner groups "aren't concerned with the general good" of the city but only with their own neighborhoods.

Hotchner maintains there have to be compromises if low-cost housing is to be provided.

To reduce rent costs, "you have to bring in more taxes" to provide for housing subsidies or "you have to make it economically feasible for the private sector" to build inexpensive housing by granting them density bonuses or removing such requirements as off-street parking, he said.

Hotchner cited some townhouse condominiums which have been built in the Canal area, where buyers could find new housing units in the $20,000 to $30,000 price range.

Although the project "doesn't look as pretty as Loch Lomond," Hotchner said the units "went like hot cakes."

Another project, a mobile home park on Smith Ranch Road, has appealed to retirement-age people.

But do the residents of San Rafael want more mobile homes and low-cost apartments in their community?

Many speakers at the hearing on the general plan indicated they do not and said they feared "another Canal area elsewhere in the city."

An attorney who often appears before Marin planning agencies, Albert Bianchi, said he's certain "most people don't want low-income housing."

"Marin has a lot of people who talk about low-income housing, but you'll probably never find anyone who wants it in his neighborhood," the attorney continued.

Bianchi, who usually represents builders and developers, said that although "some (people) are honest enough to admit this, others use pious words. They say it's a wonderful thing and so on, 'but why don't you put it in Sonoma County or some place'?"

Bianchi said low or moderate-priced housing "certainly is needed. As home prices and rents continue to increase more and more people with low or moderate incomes are forced to move out. Your kids and mine won't be able to live here — not unless they marry millionaires or go on welfare."

Bianchi said he believes in planning and controls, but building moratoriums, he said, cause "the cost of already developed housing to skyrocket . . . and pretty soon only the well-off can afford to live here."

Hotchner termed present moratoriums "a tourniquet period" in planning. But he said if the tourniquets aren't removed soon, "the patient is going to die."

Hotchner said that "preserving the environment has become a panacea" for all the contemporary problems in America, but he is not pessimistic over San Rafael residents' views on low-cost housing.

He likened neighborhood opposition to low-cost housing to the community view a few years ago toward narcotics addiction.

When Marin Open House was first proposed, he said, the drug treatment facility was feared because it was "going to bring in addicts" to San Rafael.

Soon people realized, though, Hotchner said, that the addicts were not strange creatures from city ghettos, but the sons and daughters of Marinites.

Hotlchner believes that in the same way, San Rafael residents will realize it is their own children, their parents and even they themselves who will be deprived of housing in the community.

Elizabeth Moody, president of the Ecumenical Housing Asociation of Marin, agreed with Hotchner but decried neighborhood opposition which can delay a project until inflation makes it financially impossible.

However, she said, the association has found that, when "you take the time to explain (such projects as the Martinelli housing on Lincoln Avenue for the elderly of low and moderate incomes) to the neighbors and have a good design, you can get a majority to approve.

In the case of the Martinelli project, she said, neighbors were won over after some features of the plans were changed.

In addition to such subsidized housing, Mrs. Moody suggested that allowing second units in single-family neighborhoods may be a "wonderful way" to develop more cheap housing in San Rafael.

She said rising costs nationwide make housing an increasingly difficult problem for the poor, but that in Marin the situation is worse because older housing, which in many areas becomes less and less valuable, "doesn't trickle down in Marin."

Prices tend to hold up or increase unless a property is terribly neglected, she said.

The time has come, in Hotchner's words, for the people of San Rafael to "stand up and be counted" and to decide whether they want to drive out those with modest incomes or provide homes for them.

Everyone agrees Northgate has taken business away from downtown San Rafael, but no one knows how much.

IT'S ALIVE AND WELL

Downtown Area Bouncing Back To Economic Health

By WAT TAKESHITA

San Rafael's business community, including downtown Fourth Street, is alive and well and bouncing back strongly from the 1969-70 economic slowdown.

In the spring of 1970, when the last of the county departments vacated the old Courthouse building at Fourth and A streets, pessimists described the downtown area as "standing still" or "dying on the vine."

But recent economic indicators show that San Rafael is making a strong comeback, both in physical growth and in the optimistic outlook of its business leaders. Businesses and ownerships keep changing and some major stores are gone, but the total number of businesses and sales keep increasing.

The downtown business community is further buoyed by two major projects: Development of Courthouse Square and the proposed downtown redevelopment.

The first is almost a reality, with an eight-story office and commercial structure and a two-story Bank of America building nearly completed. The area's merchants believe that pedestrian and vehicular traffic drawn by the Courthouse Square project will help revitalize the downtown area.

The second project, downtown redevelopment, is more nebulous; businessmen are not sure just what it eventually will entail, except that some type of pedestrian mall is proposed along three or four blocks of Fourth Street.

"I believe the downtown area is in good shape, and the quality of its stores is holding up," said Kenneth Reichard of The Photo Shop, chairman of the downtown merchants committee. "The completion of Courthouse Square will liven up the activity along Fourth Street," he added. "And the fact that Bank of America is going in there shows the faith it has in downtown San Rafael."

Reichard said the proposed downtown redevelopment — if — "it is pointed in the right direction" will clean up some of the dilapidated buildings and improve the looks of Fourth Street.

Fred F. Enemark, vice chairman of the board of Bell Savings and Loan Association, also predicts a bright future for downtown San Rafael. "I think business is improving and will continue to improve," he said.

"If San Rafael can widen the business area, that has to be a salutary thing," said Enemark. "And redevelopment is the vehicle for accomplishing that." He cited the successes Santa Rosa and Fresno have had in redeveloping their business cen-

COURTHOUSE SQUARE — Evidence of the revitalization of downtown San Rafael is the construction of the new eight-story office and commercial building rising at left rear and a new two-story Bank of America building. It is expected both will draw vehicular and pedestrian traffic to the downtown area.

Everyone agrees Northgate has taken business away from downtown San Rafael, but no one knows how much.

IT'S ALIVE AND WELL

Downtown Area Bouncing Back To Economic Health

By WAT TAKESHITA

San Rafael's business community, including downtown Fourth Street, is alive and well and bouncing back strongly from the 1969-70 economic slowdown.

In the spring of 1970, when the last of the county departments vacated the old Courthouse building at Fourth and A streets, pessimists described the downtown area as "standing still" or "dying on the vine."

But recent economic indicators show that San Rafael is making a strong comeback, both in physical growth and in the optimistic outlook of its business leaders. Businesses and ownerships keep changing and some major stores are gone, but the total number of businesses and sales keep increasing.

The downtown business community is further buoyed by two major projects: Development of Courthouse Square and the proposed downtown redevelopment.

The first is almost a reality, with an eight-story office and commercial structure and a two-story Bank of America building nearly completed. The area's merchants believe that pedestrian and vehicular traffic drawn by the Courthouse Square project will help revitalize the downtown area.

The second project, downtown redevelopment, is more nebulous; businessmen are not sure just what it eventually will entail, except that some type of pedestrian mall is proposed along three or four blocks of Fourth Street.

"I believe the downtown area is in good shape, and the quality of its stores is holding up," said Kenneth Reichard of The Photo Shop, chairman of the downtown merchants committee. "The completion of Courthouse Square will liven up the activity along Fourth Street," he added. "And the fact that Bank of America is going in there shows the faith it has in downtown San Rafael."

Reichard said the proposed downtown redevelopment — if — "it is pointed in the right direction" will clean up some of the dilapidated buildings and improve the looks of Fourth Street.

Fred F. Enemark, vice chairman of the board of Bell Savings and Loan Association, also predicts a bright future for downtown San Rafael. "I think business is improving and will continue to improve," he said.

"If San Rafael can widen the business area, that has to be a salutary thing," said Enemark. "And redevelopment is the vehicle for accomplishing that." He cited the successes Santa Rosa and Fresno have had in redeveloping their business centers. Fresno's pedestrian mall has also been an asset, according to him.

COURTHOUSE SQUARE — Evidence of the revitalization of downtown San Rafael is the construction of the new eight-story office and commercial building rising at left rear and a new two-story Bank of America building. It is expected both will draw vehicular and pedestrian traffic to the downtown area.

Statistics on business trends, including the rise in taxable sales and in the number of businesses, lend credence to the optimism expressed by San Rafael business leaders.

In 1969, San Rafael had 39 commercial establishments employing 50 or more persons, according to a survey by the Marin County Chamber of Commerce and Visitors Bureau. A survey this year showed 67 businesses of that size, an increase of 72 per cent.

The State Board of Equalization reports that San Rafael's taxable retail sales rose from $78,296,000 in 1963 to $160,414,000 in 1972, doubling in 10 years.

In that same 10-year period, the number of San Rafael retail stores selling taxable goods (not including business and personal services) grew from 386 to 555, up almost 44 per cent.

Most merchants concede that Northgate Shopping Center with its vast parking areas does draw business away from the downtown shopping area, but no one knows how much.

Downtown businessmen also admit there has been a rapid turnover of businesses in the downtown area during the past three or four years. But they point out that for each store that folds or moves, another shop of comparable or better quality takes its place.

An informal survey shows that the trend in central San Rafael business is away from department stores and larger chain operations toward small boutiques, specialty shops and short order restaurants.

How can congested areas like downtown San Rafael compete with outlying convenient shopping areas like Northgate? Downtown merchants hope they can do it by opening up their area through the redevelopment program, obtaining more parking areas (The city recently bought property on Fifth Avenue at Lootens Place for parking) and creating attractive and friendly shops.

"Disadvantages of the downtown are largely in the minds of the people," said Enemark. "For example, at Stonestown in San Francisco, you can see the Emporium and so you park and walk, probably a longer distance than you would in downtown San Rafael."

Both he and Reichard stressed that the important thing is to make shops attractive and inviting and to offer goods and services of the variety and quality desired by customers.

Walter F. Smith, manager of Northgate Fashion Mall, believes that the key to a good shopping area lies in controlled environment.

"By that, we mean such things as no crummy signs in the windows and no garbage cans outside, the employees required to park in stalls farthest away from the buildings," said Smith. "Employees who park near the buildings get their cars towed away." Trees and planters are constantly maintained and the area cleaned and policed at all times.

San Rafael's job picture looks good, the merchants report. The Courthouse Square project is expected to provide several hundred positions. Fireman's Fund's data processing center at Highway 101 and Lucas Valley Road will open with 900 employees and should have close to a thousand employees by 1978.

These are only two of the many new businesses that are moving into the San Rafael area.

The Marin County Chamber of Commerce and Visitors Bureau reports that a total of 875,700 square feet of new office building space was built or contracted for in Marin County between 1970 and 1972. Of this, 737,000 square-feet of office space is in San Rafael.

Sixty-four administrative and sales offices opened in Marin during that same period. 53 of the firms moved into San Rafael.

If this trend continues, San Rafael's economic health appears insured, according to businessmen.

Balanced Planning Sought

By NELS JOHNSON

INDUSTRIAL AREA — San Rafael's planning department has made its mistakes, according to the city's planning director, and the appearances of the East San Rafael industrial area is one of them.

HERBERT G. HOTCHNER
Results are mixed

Will the City of San Rafael become a characterless megapolis?

No way, according to Herbert G. Hotchner, the city's 47-year-old planning director.

"While some things have gone down the tubes, San Rafael still has the potential to characterize for the entire Bay Area the values that have been lost elsewhere," according to Hotchner.

The city's bright future, Hotchner believes, will begin to take shape after the city's emerging general plan is adopted and put to work. "We still have a good environment. If only we can preserve the things we have now," he said.

The general plan, he predicted, will strike a balance between environment and economics, since "It does you no good at all to have the best environment possible if you can't afford to live in that environment. We must strike the balance."

Hotchner, an energetic and outspoken man, appeared for his first planning commission meeting as the city's top planner in November 1966. Lauding the commissioners for a planning operation "worthy of appreciation, Hotchner declared: "My reason for coming here is that my wife and I want to live in San Rafael. Anything I do, I'm going to do with the idea of being here to see the results."

Hotchner admits that the results of his tenure have been mixed.

On one hand, Hotchner said he and his staff were the "driving force" behind the city's controversial sign ordinance, building moratorium, parking regulations and environmental impact procedures. The municipal building ban was in fact "basically my idea," he claimed.

On the other hand, Hotchner said city officials up until several years ago routinely approved subdivisions that crept up hillsides and featured exposed homes, graded slopes and steep roads. And the planning department, on some occasions, has been "incapable" of sparking needed changes, he said.

Hotchner also noted that the planning department "messed up" on the landscaping and appearance of many of the industrial buildings in East San Rafael.

Most planning problems and frustrations, Hotchner claimed, result from the changing political complexion of the city council, the planning commission, and the sheer onslaught of development proposals that have inundated city staff.

"In all cases the planning department reflects the views of the city council," he declared.

Planning decisions made long before current planning staff members were hired are responsible for most of the poorly planned hodge-podge development found throughout the city, he added.

The worst planning error in municipal history was conversion of the San Rafael Municipal Yacht Harbor into the Montecito shopping center, according to Hotchner. The $2.5 million project, which required filling half of the Canal turning basin, was approved by city leaders in 1956.

"We would consider the harbor to be a tremendous asset today, but it's gone for good," he said.

Another overwhelming planning mistake was "allowing Francisco Boulevard to develop with the appearance it has," Hotchner said, noting that the boulevard, with its potpourri of signs and structures, parallels Highway 101.

"It (the boulevard's appearance) is inexcusable. It is very bad. This is the first image visitors get of the city when they come up Highway 101," he said with a sigh.

Such major errors as Montecito Shopping Center and Francisco Boulevard could not occur today since city planners now "try to hide man-made structures as much as possible within the existing topography and vet vegetation," he said.

Hotchner declined comment on dual office buildings and a parking garage rising on San Rafael's Courthouse Square.

He described his planning philosophy as a "middle of the road approach" aimed at satisfying the demands of city councilmen. "I don't think it's our job to shy away from controversy or to stir it up," he said.

He said, however, that he has never hesitated to speak up at city meetings — sometimes at length — on controversial matters, even if his viewpoint is in conflict with that of the planning commission.

Hotchner, a native of San Francisco, graduated from the University of California at Berkeley and has logged 21 years of professional planning experience. He served as director of urban development for the City of Newburgh in New York before being hired by San Rafael.

Hotel Still Operates 103 Years Later

The Parisian House, erected at Fourth and A streets by William J. Miller in 1871, was refitted and renamed the Marin Hotel in December 1898 by Jacob Schneider, according to the Marin Journal.

The hotel, still operating 103 years later, now is owned by the S.K. Herzog Co. of San Rafael.

San Francisco guests attending a party at Mrs. Michael de Young's San Rafael estate, Meadowlands, in September 1904, arrived in Marin in specially chartered boats and trains from San Francisco.

Waiting automobiles and carriages carried them to the estate at Palm and Acacia avenues where they viewed theatrical sketches performed on a stage erected on the tennis courts.

The Story of Casa Marin Is The Story Of A Furniture Pioneer

Meyer Schwartz has had only a grammar school education. But experience, diligence and a high ethical standard have made him a shrewd, respected and successful member of Marin's business community.

As a teen-ager, Meyer had to leave school to support his mother and her three children. His father, a cancer victim, was in failing health for a number of years, then succumbed to the dread ailment when his oldest son, Meyer, was 16.

As the family breadwinner young Meyer thus carried heavy responsibilities on his shoulders.

When his schooling was terminated by circumstances, the boy tried his hand at a number of jobs. Then at 16 he found his proper niche — the furniture business.

HE HAS BEEN active in that field ever since.

But to begin at the beginning with the Meyer Schwartz story:

He was born in 1903 in Pueblo, Colo. It was there he received his grammar school education, and it was there he first had to go to work to provide the family with a paycheck. He tackled a number of jobs — the major one a timekeeper's spot with a steelmill — and he liked none of them.

Then in 1919 the family moved to Salt Lake City. And it was there that as a 16-year-old he went to work for the Broadway Furniture Co. He recalls the circumstances as these:

"Mother needed some furniture badly, and we didn't have the money to buy it. So she asked Mr. C. R Sorensen if he didn't have some work I could do at the store he owned. He did, and I had a job."

Meyer remembers Sorensen with affection. "He treated me like a son," he says.

He also credits Sorensen with getting him off on the right foot in the furniture business. "He saw to it that I had a good foundation in the business before I started selling," Meyer says.

As a matter of fact young Schwartz put in a four-year training period in all aspects of the business. He worked with carpet layers, with finishers, with stove men, with the drapery installers, etc. He then put in a fifth year in the office.

Only then was he assigned to the store's main floor as a salesman.

THAT TRAINING period has been invaluable to him, Meyers says. "It put me in a position of knowing every phase of the business. When people talked about draperies, I could answer their questions. When they talked about carpets or business procedures, I knew those subjects, too."

Today new employees are unwilling to go through any such training period, Meyer notes. "They want to go to work selling furniture immediately." It is, he believes, both their own and the profession's loss.

The training period was not monotonous to young Schwartz. He found the furniture business exciting from the outset.

"It was the first job I ever had that I liked," he says.

Why did the furniture business appeal to him?

"Because," he answers, "there is nothing routine about it. Every situation is different. Every customer has a problem that is just a little bit different from the others."

Meyer spent eight years with Broadway Furniture Co., then at the age of 24 became manager of the Wilson Furniture. Co's furniture store in Salt Lake City. He remained with that concern for four years, then in 1930 moved to Oakland.

"TRAVELING men kept telling me there were much greater opportunities in California, so I decided to find out for myself," he says.

His Bay Area career, however, got off to a rocky start. He was fired from his first job — for doing too well!

He landed the job with the furniture department of the Sears Roebuck and Co. store in Oakland. His remuneration was on a commission basis. And very shortly his salary was second only to that of the manager, surpassing that of supervisors and senior salesmen.

"My technique was to watch for new homes and apartment buildings going up, then make contacts with the owners or occupants at night on my own time."

After one year in which his commissions mounted steadily, the store's management decided it could no longer afford the hustling young salesman's "salary" and let him go.

Turned loose by Sears, Schwartz made his first business contact in Marin. He moved to Sausalito and became manager of the Langson Furniture Co., now Attell's Southern Marin Furniture Mart.

"I really didn't know Marin well at the time," he recalls, "but we had driven over here on weekends, and what I had seen of the county I had liked."

IN THE FALL of 1931, however, he left Marin, taking a job with the Union Furniture Co. of San Francisco as manager of the San Jose store. With that chain he also managed the Oakland and Phoenix stores, then became supervisor of all its outside stores.

Schwartz was with Union from 1931 until 1938. Most of those years were depression years in which the furniture industry was particularly hard hit. But Unions' business volume climbed from half a million dollars to six million dollars during that time.

Schwartz then decided he wanted to go into business for himself. And he tackled the problem of selecting a site for his initial enterprise.

"My studies showed that the greatest opportunity was in Sacramento," he says. "But I had always loved the terrain and the tranquility of Marin. And so I picked Marin."

In 1938 he opened Schwartz' Home Furnishers in West San Rafael where Western Furniture is now located.

His new concern enjoyed a steady growth in business volume.

In 1956 Meyer Schwartz and his son Milton opened the new Casa Marin Store at 1654 Second St., San Rafael and in 1970 added a complete Colonial Store, Colony House of Casa Marin at 2158 4th St., San Rafael on the Miracle Mile, managed by Richard Schwartz.

Both stores offer complete services in home decoration, drapery and carpet besides carrying the best furniture and carpet lines available.

City-County Interests Differ

By ERIK INGRAM

Sharp words and heated debates — spiced by a pinch of mutual mistrust — have long been a part of the roller-coaster relationship between San Rafael and the county and probation will continue to be.

In the last year alone, the two governments have clashed over a number of issues, including redevelopment, fire protection and planning.

Though officials are reluctant to acknowledge it, prospects are for more friction as the city demands a greater voice in the affairs of unincorporated areas within its "sphere of influence."

"County supervisors have their interests to protect, and we have ours," San Rafael Mayor C. Paul Bettini said. "It's natural that disagreements will occur . . . but we are working to resolve them."

Bettini, a city official for 10 years, pointed to formation of special committees of councilmen and supervisors to discuss growth control and future planning.

Here, as in most other cases, the issue boils down to the interests of city residents versus the interests of noncity residents, and the tie is a mutual desire for growth control.

The joint committee meetings were used successfully to thrash out the redevelopment controversy, which ignited after San Rafael attempted to ride roughshod over the county and various school districts in a bid for more tax revenue.

Using the same procedure, the city and county hope to resolve questions over the future planning and growth of areas around San Rafael, primarily the Las Gallinas Valley.

The city maintains it should have a strong say over future growth control on the theory that much of the unincorporated areas eventually will be annexed.

Among some noncity residents, meanwhile, there is a general reluctance to accept city policies and politics. With the exception of Terra Linda, annexations of residential areas have been practically nil in recent years, according to County Administrator John F. Barrows.

This, coupled with a protective attitude by supervisors toward noncity residents, with whom they have most of their dealings, creates a situation ripe for disagreement, Barrows continued.

It affects dealings not only with San Rafael, the county's largest and richest community, but virtually every other city in the county.

Barrows, who favors cities providing urban services (roads, police, fire, etc.) to these areas, said the conflicts may be resolved only when the state allows "forced annexations regardless of popular opinion."

"The cities are the agencies best able to provide these services," the county administrator said, adding it probably won't happen until the annexation laws are changed. "People are not willing to accept the city on their own."

Proposals to permit forced annexations have died quick deaths in Sacramento.

Barrows' counterpart in San Rafael, City Manager William J. Bielser, viewed the problem in a slightly different way.

Bielser, who has been the city's chief administrator for slightly more than two years, said he agreed with Barrows that supervisors tend to lean toward noncity interests but took it one step further.

The manner in which supervisors are elected, by district, promotes parochialism to the detriment of countywide interests as well as city interests, he said.

"Supervisors vote for the good of their districts first and the countywide good second," Bielser said. The city's redevelopment project was stalled by supervisors representing local interests as opposed to countywide interests, in his opinion.

Bielser said he favors a system used in some charter counties where supervisors are elected on a countywide basis to represent individual districts. (Marin is not a charter county).

"If they were elected on a countywide ballot, the countywide interests will be better served as opposed to district interests," he continued.

Bielser said he views both the board of supervisors and city council as making "honest attempts to work and cooperate" and, like Bettini, noted increased use of joint committees to discuss issues.

Such discussions "were nonexistent in the past," he said, adding that while the city and county are divided on some issues "there's a lot of cooperation on small things that nobody hears about."

The city does not require business license fees for those using the Marin Veterans Memorial Building in order to help promote use of the county-run facility.

On the other hand, he continued, the county waived building rental fees for the upcoming Centennial ball.

Bielser said the city has a close working relationship with the county open space district staff and the parks and recreation department staff — both headed by Pierre W. Joske.

He heaped criticism, however, on the county public works department and county transit district — both headed by Ray W. Foreaker Jr.

The point being, he continued, that the county has no central administration, which makes it difficult to work with. Department heads answer directly to the supervisors and county policy depends upon to whom one speaks.

Bielser pointed to a dispute two years ago over a longstanding agreement for use of some county road funds within city limits.

In the face of existing county policy, Foreaker unsuccessfully attempted to junk the agreement, and, in effect, create a new policy.

"I sympathize with anyone trying to identify a county policy," agreed county administrator Barrows. He said, however, that criticisms are often exaggerated.

"There are a lot of faults in this system but it's operating as well as it can, I think," he said.

Supervisor Michael Wornum, currently chairman of the board, said he views past problems between the city and county as having been created when the old power structure in San Rafael lost control of county government.

It started to ebb with the death of former County Clerk George Jones, who ran county government with the conservative backing of the San Rafael businessmen, Wornum said.

The hiring of Paul Zucker as county planning director represented the break, he continued, adding that since then city politics have changed to be more in line with the county.

"The old order is out," he said. "The new council has opened the door to greater cooperation."

COUNTY OFFICES — County government which operates out of the Civic Center in northern San Rafael, offen has been the target of attacks by the city administration which seeks more of a voice in matters concerning the city's sphere of influence.

CITY OFFICES — San Rafael City Hall, on Fifth Street, is headquarters for city government. City officials are hoping in the future to forge a more harmonious link than they have had in the past with Marin County supervisors, whom they feel many times in the past have acted against the best interests of the city.

San Rafael Traffic Woes Show A Continued Growth

By PAUL E. PETERZELL

The challenges posed by traffic congestion in San Rafael are common to most cities in Marin and it is not realistic to expect them to be met by local solutions alone.

A city-wide transit system might go a long way toward unsnarling traffic in San Rafael, but it is not likely to be forthcoming in the foreseeable future. Though it is the county's largest city and its commercial hub, San Rafael simply does not have enough money to purchase its own people mover to keep residents and visitors out of their cars.

With the price of buses reaching almost $60,000 and drivers costing some $22,500 a year, and rapid transit costs skyrocketing, the city can hope only to buy into a regional transit system.

This is what is happening already. Local transit is financed by the county's transit district which uses part of each city's share of gasoline tax revenue to buy the service from the Golden Gate Bridge District. Commuter service to San Francisco is provided by the bridge district.

Seeking to obtain transit from outside agencies is bound to cause some problems. J. Stanley Ott, San Rafael's senior planner in charge of advance planning, noted that the city has little control over a power like the bridge district. "But no matter how little our influence, we have to plan and push our views," he said.

The city's views can be especially influential on whatever

BUS SERVICE — Though the preliminary San Rafael General Plan calls for considerable expansion of bus service there is little chance for any change in the near future. Buses like this one operated by the Golden Gate Transit District already do quite well according to one official, but high costs make immediate expansion unlikely.

COUNTY SEAT IN 2074 — The imaginations of San Rafael and Terra Linda high school students, and that of Independent-Journal artist Jack Lucey blend to create this vision of San Rafael 100 years hence. The most obvious predictions are that the skyline, dominated in 1974 by ridgelines, the Courthouse Square construction project and church towers, will be jagged with towering business buildings, laced together with mass transit ways. Probably the private auto will have to share its monopoly with several kinds of surface and air transport.

PREDICTIONS FOR 2074

Students' Visions Differ Greatly

By GEORGE NEVIN

The year is 2074, and San Rafael is getting ready to celebrate its second century of existence.

But James Smith isn't thinking about the centennial festivities as he rides a shuttle bus to his job in downtown San Rafael.

Instead, he's wondering whether he can afford to continue living in his highrise apartment built on the site of a former city park in the San Rafael hills.

He's wondering how many times that week he'll have to wear his oxygen mask while he's outdoors.

And he's wondering if the tiny patch of green he can see from his 20th-story balcony — the green that makes his rent so high — will survive yet another onslaught by a development company eager to build dwellings on the .4-acre plot.

Smith's San Rafael is a composite of the visions of some high school students who were asked to peer into the future of their city. But it's not the only vision.

According to other students, Smith, a middle-income insurance executive with a wife and three children, has to live in Rohnert Parkotati because houses in San Rafael cost too much.

He commutes daily on some form of public transportation to his office in a revitalized downtown area. His bus passes many acres of open space, purchased by wise city fathers in the late 1970s when it became evident that buying land was the only way to keep it from being developed.

Still other students see a San Rafael with a healthy, happy balance of older folks, young couples with families and middle-aged people with varying incomes and interests. Land is expensive and none of it is wasted, but a visitor can look down on the city and see new single-family neighborhoods, some apartments, central commercial areas in downtown and Northgate, and a smattering of parks and open hillsides.

San Rafael High School senior Sharon Fox, 18, has an optimistic view of her city's future and believes that its citizens in the next 100 years will participate in the decision-making to a much greater extent than they now do.

"In the past five years, there's been a great increase in the awareness and participation by citizens," said Miss Fox, secretary of the school's Student Action Board.

Middle class to move?

That trend will continue, she asserted.

The city's future "can take two routes," she said. "Either we'll develop a working general plan and the city will be balanced with people, or we'll keep on going toward an upper middle-class population."

Miss Fox thinks the former will happen and that low-income housing will be built, and young and old people will find a place in San Rafael.

But a different version was offered by Max Thelan, 16, chairman of the Student Action Board.

Real estate prices will remain high, (though they will level off somewhat) and force many middle-income families to move further north to Novato or Southern Sonoma, he said. As they abandon San Rafael to high-income families, they will take their school-age children with them. A result — more and more schools will close.

"I've noticed that there used to be lots of kids in my neighborhood," said Thelan. Now there are none."

With development rapidly reaching saturation point, pressure will come to turn old, spacious houses into multiple dwellings, perhaps communes, said both Thelan and Miss Fox.

The San Rafael of the future will turn to business revenues for an ever-increasing portion of its tax support, said another San Rafael High student, 17-year-old Joanie Flynn, senior class secretary.

Northgate will remain an important commercial center and, when the city's ambitious redevelopment scheme is finished, more areas will be targeted for redevelopment.

Over at Terra Linda High, a different view of San Rafael and its future prevails.

With the area's recent annexation into the city still fresh in their minds, student leaders think of themselves less as San Rafael residents than citizens of Marin County.

But in the future, said Doug Scallon, 18, a senior at the student body representative to the high school board, "There will be a change in the power structure. The balance used to be on the other side of the hill." (in Central San Rafael) but soon it will shift north, he said.

If nothing is done to stop them, suggested 17-year-old Pat Zannini, senior class president, "a lot of corporations will try to make this place grow."

And as they do so successfully, added Scallon. "The area will reach its saturation point and people will move further north."

Despite current trends, the automobile and the single-family house are here to stay, believes Bruce Bollen, 17, student body leader at Terra Linda High. "It's too much of an American tradition" to disappear, he said.

Waving his hand toward acres of tract homes surrounding the school, Bollen said: "In 100 years these homes aren't going to be here. They'll fall down. If they don't they'll be slums."

Scallon, thought, said he didn't think the decay would be allowed to continue that long. By then, Terra Linda will be ripe for redevelopment itself, he said.

All six students said transportation and recreation would be two of the biggest concerns of future San Rafael.

"I think you'll find a big change in the working hours of people. There'll be more free time so they'll have to have more types of recreation," said Bollen.

"In a hundred years, I suspect the area around the auditorium (Veterans Building) will be turned into a sports complex, he said.

Barring some medical breakthrough, the six students won't be around to witness San Rafael's second centennial celebration. But, they were asked, did they think they would be living in San Rafael in a shorter period of time, say 50 years?

Bollen: "No, I'll be in Oregon or further north, not in a crowded suburban spot. This area is too close for me."

Miss Flynn: "I like Marin, its people and their philosophies. I can't think of another city in Marin I'd rather live in."

Miss Fox: "I identify with San Rafael. It has a fantastic diversity of people and areas and businesses. I love the people here. I'm so much more comfortable with San Rafael people."

Scallon: "America is such a mobile society. I'll be mobile — I'll be moving around quite a bit."

Thelan: "I'd like to live in Marin County, though I don't identify with San Rafael that much."

COUNTY SEAT [illegible] IN 2074 — The imaginations of San Rafael a[illegible]d Terra Linda high school students, and t[illegible]at of Independent-Journal artist Jack Luc[illegible] blend to create this vision of San Rafael [illegible]00 years hence. The most obvious predic[illegible]ns are that the skyline, dominated in 1[illegible]4 by ridgelines, the Courthouse Square construction project and church towers, will be jagged with towering business buildings, laced together with mass transit ways. Probably the private auto will have to share its monopoly with several kinds of surface and air transport.

PREDICTIONS FOR 2074

Students' Visions Differ Greatly

By GEORGE NEV[illegible]

The year is 2[illegible]4, a[illegible] San Rafael is getting ready t[illegible] celebrate its second century [illegible] existence.

But James Sm[illegible]h isn't [illegible]inking about the cen[illegible]nnial [illegible]tivities as he rides a shuttle [illegible]s to his job in downtown San [illegible]fael.

Instead, he's wond[illegible]ring whether he can afford to [illegible]ntinue living in his highrise [illegible]partment built on the site [illegible]f a former city park in th[illegible] San Rafael hills.

He's wondering how [illegible]any times that week he'll h[illegible]e to wear his oxygen mask [illegible]hile he's outdoors.

And he's wondering if t[illegible] tiny patch of green he can se[illegible]rom his 20th-story balcony [illegible] the green that makes his [illegible]t so high — will survive yet a[illegible]ther onslaught by a develo[illegible]ent company eager to build [illegible]wellings on the .4-acre plot.

Smith's San Rafael is [illegible]omposite of the visions of [illegible]ome high school students wh[illegible]ere asked to peer into the fu[illegible]e of their city. But it's not t[illegible]only vision.

According to other st[illegible]nts, Smith, a middle-income [illegible]surance executive with a w[illegible] and three children, has to [illegible]e in Rohnert Park o[illegible]ti be[illegible]use houses in San R[illegible]fael c[illegible] too much.

He commutes daily o[illegible]ome form of public transporta[illegible]n to his office in a revitalized [illegible]owntown area. His bus [illegible]sses many acres of open spa[illegible] purchased by wise city fat[illegible]s in the late 1970s when it b[illegible]ame evident that buying la[illegible] was the only way to keep i[illegible]rom being developed.

Still other students see San Rafael with a healthy, [illegible]ppy balance of older folks, [illegible]oung couples with families a[illegible] middle-aged people with [illegible]ying incomes and interests. L[illegible]d is expensive and none of [illegible]t is wasted, but a visitor c[illegible] look down on the city and s[illegible] new single-family neighbor[illegible]ods, some apartments, centr[illegible]commercial areas in downto[illegible] and Northgate, and a smatte[illegible]g of parks and open hillsides.

San Rafael High Scho[illegible] senior Sharon Fox, 18, [illegible] an optimistic view of her [illegible]ity's future and believes t[illegible] its citizens in the next 10[illegible]ears will participate in the d[illegible]sion-making to a much grea[illegible] extent than they now do.

"In the past five [illegible]ars, there's been a great incr[illegible]se in the awareness and partic[illegible]ation by citizens," said Miss Fox, secretary of the school's Student Action Board.

San Rafael Traffic Woes Show A Continued Growth

By PAUL E. PETERZELL

The challenges posed by traffic congestion in San Rafael are common to most cities in Marin and it is not realistic to expect them to be met by local solutions alone.

A city-wide transit system might go a long way toward unsnarling traffic in San Rafael, but it is not likely to be forthcoming in the foreseeable future. Though it is the county's largest city and its commercial hub, San Rafael simply does not have enough money to purchase its own people mover to keep residents and visitors out of their cars.

With the price of buses reaching almost $60,000 and drivers costing some $22,500 a year, and rapid transit costs skyrocketing, the city can hope only to buy into a regional transit system.

This is what is happening already. Local transit is financed by the county's transit district which uses part of each city's share of gasoline tax revenue to buy the service from the Golden Gate Bridge District. Commuter service to San Francisco is provided by the bridge district.

Seeking to obtain transit from outside agencies is bound to cause some problems. J. Stanley Ott, San Rafael's senior planner in charge of advance planning, noted that the city has little control over a power like the bridge district. "But no matter how little our influence, we have to plan and push our views," he said.

The city's views can be especially influential on whatever

BUS SERVICE — Though the preliminary San Rafael General Plan calls for considerable expansion of bus service there is little chance for any change in the near future. Buses like this one operated by the Golden Gate Transit District already do quite well according to one official, but high costs make immediate expansion unlikely.

rapid transit system someday comes through San Rafael, Ott said.

The city should have considerable say over routes, terminal sites and parking for transit, he added.

Ott seems certain that some form of mass transit is inevitable in the county because of the "somewhat unrestricted growth to the north of us." No matter how Marin and San Rafael limit growth, burgeoning Sonoma County still will push a lot of its commuters through Marin to jobs in San Francisco, he said.

A major way to keep Marinites out of the growing glut of commuters, Ott added, would be to increase the job market within the county.

San Rafael's planning director, Herbert G. Hotchner, pointed out that redevelopment of the downtown and eastern areas of the city will offer opportunities to relieve traffic by adding new streets suggested by the preliminary general plan.

The short-range picture, however, is for little change — largely because of the ever-inflating cost of continuing even the present limited bus service. The preliminary general plan calls for considerable expansion of the local bus service, which now covers 40 miles of city streets, but does not say how to pay for it.

Jerome M. Kuykendall, assistant bus transit manager for the bridge district, predicted the level of bus service in San Rafael will change "very little" in the near future. Service along major corridors already is "quite good," he said.

Currently, the bridge district is considering adding routes in Bret Harte and the D Street areas, he said. There also has been "some talk" about a second route in Terra Linda, according to Kuykendall.

Costs of bus service will continue to rise, thus largely precluding extensive expansion of bus frequency and routes, he stressed.

He discounted a suggestion by Ott that minibuses would be more suitable for city service than the large 45-passenger coaches that now comprise the system's fleet of 188 buses. Kuykendall conceded the heavy buses have "contributed to the wearing out of San Rafael's streets," but argued their advantages still are considerable.

Two-thirds of the bus system's budget goes to salaries, he noted, so shaving the size of its vehicles would not save much money. Having only one size of bus, he said, permits the bridge district to maintain a smaller and simpler stock of parts, makes training of drivers and maintenance crews simpler, and allows easier interchanging of buses.

The only advantages of minibuses are that they look better in residential areas, cause less wear and tear on streets and are a little quieter, Kuykendall said.

He insisted there are few areas where minibuses could go that could not also be served by large coaches.

Another view of the city's future transit is offered by the preliminary general plan for the city, an $80,000 document prepared by Duncan and Jones of Berkeley and now under review by city agencies.

Echoing Ott's view, the plan says that "it may be necessary to convert to some form of rail rapid transit system" to reduce the detrimental impact of through traffic on San Rafael.

An inevitable result of such a system, it noted, will be to stimulate development both downtown and at Northgate.

Better local bus service, the plan cautions, will require widening of existing streets, and could make it necessary to reserve some streets for buses.

The planning consultants also called for revision of the east-west traffic corridor through downtown, a new freeway interchange near Second Street and a "transportation hub" downtown to house rapid transit, buses, parking and a people mover, or horizontal elevator, serving the Fourth Street commercial area.

It recommends that expansion of Highway 101 through the city be limited to one more lane in each direction. The new lanes should be reserved for buses at least until they can run on their own right-of-way, probably over the existing railroad right-of-way, acording to the plan.

Without improvements in transit, the report warned, the freeway will grow wider and wider.

Voters through Marin, including San Rafael, will ballot June 4 on a measure to increase the maximum property tax rate for the county transit district from 5 to 25 cents per $100 assessed valuation.

TRAFFIC GLUT — City officials, noting traffic congestion is a daily hassle in downtown San Rafael, are eyeing mass transit programs and redevelopment programs as possible solutions to rid the city of scenes like this on Fourth Street.

FREEWAY FRENZY — Without additional forms of transit the freeway will just grow wider and wider through San Rafael, officials warn, as residents from north of the city commute to jobs in San Francisco. Planning consultants for the city have recommended that expansion of Highway 101 through the city be limited to just one more lane, and that to be reserved for buses.

FERRY SYSTEM — New ferries, like this one being built for the Golden Gate Bridge District, have taken some of the pressure off the highways and Golden Gate Bridge, but offer little hope for easing San Rafael's traffic woes, since motorists using the ferries must drive through the city to get to them.

Another 29% rated their dealers good, and adding these together we have 66% of the BMW dealers obviously satisfying what must be a demanding group of owners. (R&T readers and owners of German cars—what else?) When we surveyed BMW 1600 and 2002 owners in 1969 this figure was almost the same—65%—but then only 12% of the dealers were called excellent. On the negative end, 15% of the BMW dealers were rated poor, a low (good) reading for this category.

It's our custom to name the dealers that got excellent rating. Not all the owners gave names, but we can list these: Hyde Park Motors, Los Angeles; BMW Auto Zentrum, San Rafael, Calif.; Tulsa BMW, Tulsa; Foreign Car Clinic, Dobbs Ferry, N.Y.; Great Neck Imports, Great Neck, N.Y.; Hafkemeyer of Kansas City; Ott & Burger, Williamstown, Mass.; Fritz's, Trenton, N.J.; Nemet Motors, Jamaica, N.Y. # Less Travel Headaches Are Ahead

Grumbling commuters must be convinced that the Miracle Mile got its name because it is such a miraculous conformation of dangerous curves, outmoded left turn slots and rush-hour traffic jams.

But the ulcer rate for motorists who use it is expected to decline soon when the roadway linking the Ross Valley and West Marin with San Rafael is widened and otherwise improved.

Aside from its inconveniences for drivers, the street is downright dangerous. Forty-three auto accidents were reported along its route in 1972 and the first nine months of 1973, according to Henry Ingwersen, traffic sergeant for the San Rafael Police Department.

Although there were no fatalities, several of the crashes resulted in major injuries. Most of the accidents were caused by failure to yield right of way, failure to stop for a red light or by speeding. Mix this with an archaic highway design and there is bound to be trouble.

Construction on the $750,000 improvement project, designed to upgrade the street from Marquard Avenue near Fourth Street to the westerly city limits originally was to have begun this month and been completed by December.

However, changes in federal guidelines for obtaining highway funding have delayed the project.

About $500,000 in federal money, or 70 per cent of the job's cost, are expected to be received sometime this year, according to public works director Ely Caillouette Jr. This means the street improvements will not begin until late this year or in early 1975.

"The main purpose of this job is to increase safety," Caillouette said. "The left turn situation is especially bad."

Left turn lanes will be created for eastbound traffic at East Crescent Drive, Alexander Avenue and the intersection of Second and Fourth streets at Marquard Avenue. Turn lanes for westbound traffic will be built at Ross Valley Drive and Greenfield Avenue.

This will decrease the danger and annoyance of having to jump on the brakes to avoid the car that must slow down, blocking one entire lane, while it maneuvers into narrow turning strips in the median island.

The improvements will include a new eastbound traffic lane to relieve the early morning commute crush. Parking may be provided if there is space.

Plans call for the realignment of the route where it meets Second Street, straightening out the curve that has been the scene of numerous auto smash-ups.

West End Avenue will be regraded and a traffic barrier placed between Fourth Street and the Miracle Mile.

A retaining wall will be placed along the south side of the Miracle Mile, adding to safety and diminishing the noise generated by cars humming on three lanes. Heightened noise levels were a concern expressed by citizens when the project was approved unanimously by city councilmen in 1971. Aesthetic considerations, however, have led to the abandonment of original plans for a sound barrier.

Admitting that the work will cause an inconvenience to drivers, Caillouette noted that the city expects few complaints, since most motorists will welcome the improvements.

The project will require no condemnation of property, according to Caillouette, although some trees along the roadway will have to be removed. Loss of the trees, however, will be offset by new tree plantings and landscaping, he said.

The job is expected to cost the city about $200,000, to be paid from gas tax revenues and county urban thoroughfare funds.

Accompanying the road work will be undergrounding of utilities from Marquard Avenue to the westerly city limits on both sides of the road. Pacific Gas and Electric Co. will provide aobut $350,000 for that part of the project.

City Breaking Shackles Of Antique Road Grid

By PAUL LIBERATORE

In 1874, when the city of San Rafael was only an infant, its streets and lanes were laid out to accommodate those leisurely days of horse and buggy travel.

Even as the city grew and matured, its grid pattern of narrow streets remained the same, prevented from major change by the basin shaped topography of the area and the knotty logistics associated with road widening projects.

Now, 100 years later, the easy pace of 19th Century travel long has been supplanted by the transportation problems of modern, urban life.

"I know we have bad traffic problems," said San Rafael public works director Ely Caillouette Jr. "But show me a city that doesn't."

Nevertheless, city officials have decided that the time has come to take extraordinary measures to alleviate the vehicle crush.

When budget time rolls around this summer, for example, the city staff will recommend the hiring of a full-time, professional traffic engineer.

San Rafael's redevelopment agency has included in its master plan a thorough traffic engineering study. The results of that study to a great extent will determine the direction the city will take towards planning traffic circulation for the future, according to Caillouette.

Already, much has been done to relieve the downtown traffic bottlenecks which are unavoidable in a society that has relied on an ever increasing number of private automobiles to transport its citizens.

As recently as 1965, there were no major one-way streets in the city. All downtown streets were two-way and Fourth Street, intersecting San Rafael's major downtown commercial zone, had diagonal parking for its full length and most of the time resembled a permanent parking lot.

Diagonal parking took about half of the street width and when one car backed out of a parking stall, the traffic flow in one lane ground to a complete halt.

In 1966, there was considerable discussion about changing the diagonal parking on Fourth Street to parallel. In the face of staunch opposition from citizens who felt precious parking space would be lost, the city council ordered the change, accomplished during a single weekend, including complete repaving and resurfacing from E Street to Lincoln Avenue.

The city also extended Third Street from E to Shaver streets. This allowed the conversion of Second and Third Street to one-way streets.

This change was critical. In addition to San Rafael being the county's largest city, it is the major transportation corridor connecting the east and west sectors. Most of this traffic is carried by Second and Third streets, currently about 20,000 cars per day and increasing at a rate of four per cent a year.

Even with improvements, these two streets account for San Rafael's biggest traffic headache, according to Caillouette. "The only solution is to widen them, taking a whole row of properties," he said.

But that would be expensive, eliminate valuable parking spaces and probably generate a good deal of controversy. In 1966, the state Division of Highways found that a major roadway to carry east-west traffic was necessary, but the suggestion was strongly rejected by the public.

Although there are no immediate plans for changes on Second and Third streets, the city must look for ways to improve traffic flow in the coming years, the public works director said.

In 1969, a study by traffic consultant D. Jackson Faustman recommended a new one-way street pattern. The traffic plan he suggested has been put into effect in stages, the latest being the conversion of A, B, C and D streets to one-way last year.

"We feel that this generally has improved traffic conditions quite a bit and acceptance by the public has been very good," Caillouette said. "When the redevelopment master plan is completed, we will know much better what can be done within the redevelopment area to improve the situation further. I think we have seen a lot of progress in the past few years, and I am sure that anyone who was here and remembers the conditions prior to going to one-way streets will agree."

Class Size Was Dispute Even In '03

A letter to the editor in the San Rafael Independent of Oct. 20, 1903, shows that disputes over class sizes long predate the rapid school growth which followed World War II.

The letter, signed merely "Spectator," tells of the visit of several mothers to a San Rafael Board of Education meeting to ask that something be done about too-large classes in the grammer school.

The superintendent, it reported, admitted that there were 71 pupils in the fifth grade, but pointed out there were also two teachers (both in the same room, apparently). The average throughout the school was 42 pupils per teacher, he said.

And school board members explained that they were unable to hire more teachers for lack of funds — the school tax, which in those days was controlled by the county board of supervisors, having been reduced to 15 cents per $100 assessed valuation.

Less Travel Headaches Are Ahead

Grumbling commuters must be convinced that the Miracle Mile got its name because it is such a miraculous conformation of dangerous curves, outmoded left turn slots and rush-hour traffic jams.

But the ulcer rate for motorists who use it is expected to decline soon when the roadway linking the Ross Valley and West Marin with San Rafael is widened and otherwise improved.

Aside from its inconveniences for drivers, the street is downright dangerous. Forty-three auto accidents were reported along its route in 1972 and the first nine months of 1973, according to Henry Ingwersen, traffic sergeant for the San Rafael Police Department.

Although there were no fatalities, several of the crashes resulted in major injuries. Most of the accidents were caused by failure to yield right of way, failure to stop for a red light or by speeding. Mix this with an archaic highway design and there is bound to be trouble.

Construction on the $750,000 improvement project, designed to upgrade the street from Marquard Avenue near Fourth Street to the westerly city limits originally was to have begun this month and been completed by December.

However, changes in federal guidelines for obtaining highway funding have delayed the project.

About $500,000 in federal money, or 70 per cent of the job's cost, are expected to be received sometime this year, according to public works director Ely Caillouette Jr. This means the street improvements will not begin until late this year or in early 1975.

Transit Changes A Spur To San Rafael's Growth

Rails, Spans, Auto Bring New Spurts Of Progress

By DOROTHY GARDINER

A WATERY WAIT — Horse-drawn rigs standing in shin-deep water, wait the arrival of the northbound North Pacific Coast commute train in 1896 at the B Street station. The pioneer trains traveled along today's Miracle Mile, through the Ross Valley, to a ferry terminal at Sausalito.

From the beginning San Rafael's growth and development has hinged on transit and the city's accessibility to San Francisco and neighboring Bay Area communities.

A century ago the building of three railroads transformed the isolated, sparsely populated frontier town into a popular retreat for wealthy San Franciscans.

The advent of automobiles and the auto-carrying ferries and subsequent construction of two bridges and a highway system later changed the small country town into a sprawling urban center.

San Rafael's proximity to San Francisco and the exodus West that began at the end of World War II caused its population to skyrocket from 13,848 in 1950 to about 45,000 today.

Today 89,000 cars (in summer) and 76,000 (in winter) whiz along Highway 101 across the city according to Robert W. Halligan, district information officer for the California Transportation Department.

Last year 34,439,788 vehicles crossed the Golden Gate Bridge between Marin and San Francisco. The district's 188 green and white buses carried 6,560,026 passengers and the district's single ferry transported an additional 1,014,866 persons between Sausalito and San Francisco.

A trip to San Francisco from San Rafael that today takes 20 minutes by car took four hours by schooner in the 1840s and 1850s when only a handful of English and Spanish speaking settlers lived in a cluster around the crumbling Mission San Rafael Arcangel.

Travel speeded up slightly in the late 1850s when Charles Minturn, owner of the Contra Costa Navigation Company, began running steamers between Point San Quentin, San Francisco and Petaluma. A round trip fare to San Francisco by steamer cost $5.

In the mid 1860s the first San Francisco commuters started settling in San Rafael.

They traveled by stagecoach, described as a "mud wagon" between the ferry connection and San Rafael's Fourth Street. The trip took an hour.

To shorten travel time, a group of San Rafael men in 1865 built a toll road across the marshland southeast of San Rafael. Four years later this road became the right-o-fway for Marin's first railroad, the San Rafael and San Quentin, organized in San Rafael in 1869 with $50,000 capital.

Chinese gandy dancers (laborers) soon began laying iron track and, in March of 1870, the pioneer railroad's one steam-powered locomotive and passenger car made a maiden run from B Street to the ferry connection.

Reporting the event, the Marin County Journal predicted: "We expect to see a great influx of visitors during the coming year."

Soon the train was meeting Minturn's ferry three times a day, leaving the B Street depot at 7:30 and 11:30 a.m. and 2:45 p.m.

Around this time William Tell Coleman and Jacob and J.O.B. (Orey) Shirt began subdividing the town. Coleman developed a 1,100 acre farm in Magnolia Valley into what later became the Dominican area and the Shorts put a residential subdivision south of Fourth Street.

In 1871, a group of Bay Area businessmen organized the North Pacific Coast Railroad Co. to run from the ferry in Sausalito to Tomales.

When the railroad decided to bypass San Rafael by running its main line through the Ross Valley, disappointed San Rafael residents, led by the developer Coleman, protested.

Coleman not only sued the County of Marin — successfully delaying a $160,000 railroad subsidy for three years — but began negotiating with railroad magnate Peter Donahue to extend his Sonoma County-based San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad into San Rafael.

At a town meeting in June of 1873 Coleman told the assembly that Donahue's railroad was necessary "to infuse new life here." Not only did San Rafael need "frequent communication with San Francisco and reduced fares," he said, but a rail connection to northern counties.

Donahue brought the cheering crowd to its feet by declaring that if his railroad came to San Rafael the town "would soon take her rightful place as rival of Oakland." That East Bay community, chosen as the western terminal for the nation's first transcontinental railroad, the Central Pacific, was emerging as a prosperous railhead.)

Despite the cheers, seven years would pass before the San Francisco-North Pacific reached San Rafael.

Meanwhile construction of the rival North Pacific Coast was under way in 1873 as the Chinese laborers laid track up the Ross Valley to "the Junction" (later San Anselmo) where a spur track ran along today's Miracle Mile into down-

SERVING MARIN COUNTY OVER 50 YEARS

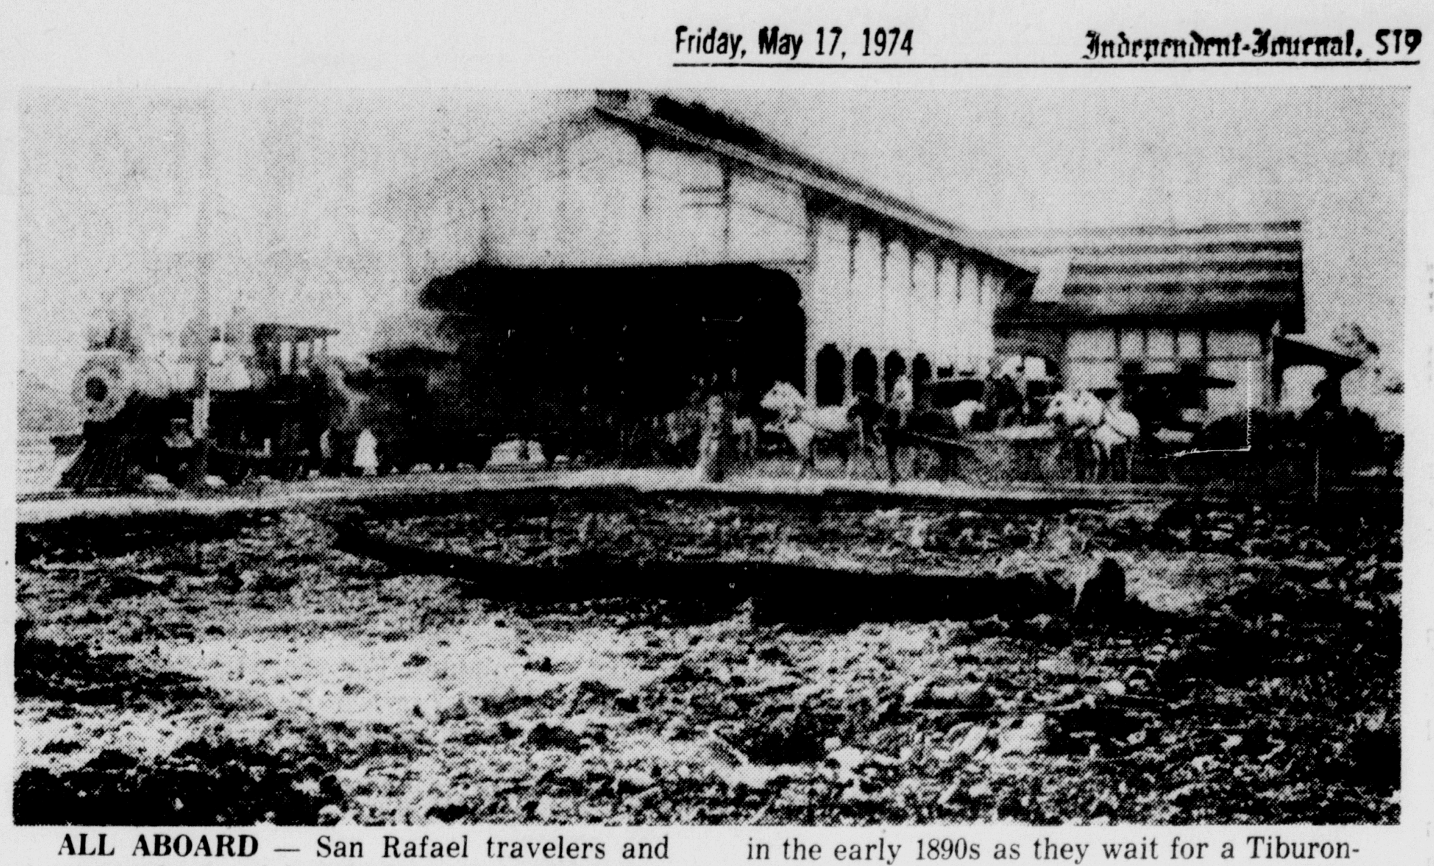
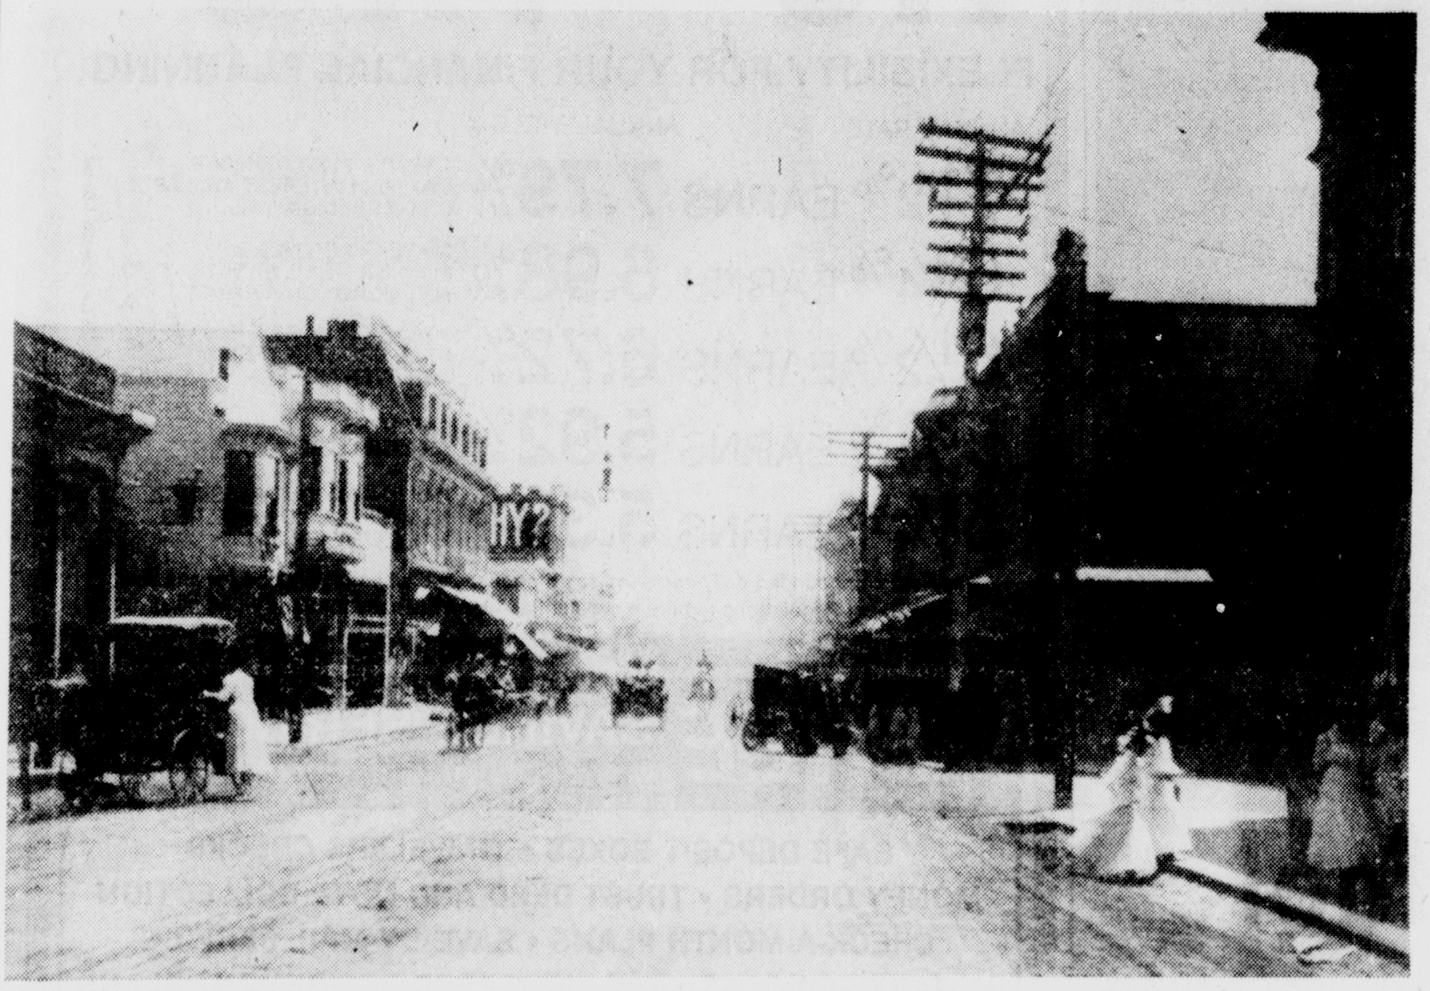
BUSY THOROUGHFARE — By the 1930s San Rafael's Fourth Street became congested with automobile traffic. Shoppers parked diagonally as a steady stream of traffic moved along the street's center. Cross county traffic had been removed from the street in 1929 when the state built a two-lane road from San Rafael to Alto.



ALL ABOARD — San Rafael travelers and wagon loads of freight line up at the Union Depot at Third Street and Tamalpais Avenue in the early 1890s as they wait for a Tiburon-bound train.



AUTO DEBUT — By 1905 one of the city's first horseless carriages is pictured (center) driving west on Fourth Street. For years, the automobile was to be outnumbered by horseback riders and horse-drawn buggies.

town San Rafael.

Passenger service on the North Pacific Coast railroad started Jan. 7, 1875, enabling San Rafael travelers to ride the train to the old San Rafael and San Quentin ferry connection at San Quentin or to a new ferry embarcadero at Sausalito.

Improved transit was a major factor in the city's population explosion, from 600 residents in 1874, the year San Rafael became Marin's first self-governing municipality, to 2,276 by 1880.

Beginning in 1879 when the iron tracks of the Donahue's San Francisco-North Pacific reached town, local travelers could ride Donahue trains north to Santa Rosa, Healdsburg and Cloverdale or the rival NPC coaches to West Marin and Tomales.

The San Quentin ferry service ended in 1883 when the North Pacific Coast wharf and its ferry the Saucelito were destroyed in a fire that started aboard the steamer.

By then, Donahue was extending his SF&NP tracks to his own ferry connection at Tiburon that opened in 1884. The town of Tiburon was floated into existence as its original buildings — engine houses, depot and hotel — were barged from Donahue's Landing on Petaluma Creek in Sonoma County.

Rivalry became the name of the game as the railroads completed to offer the lowest fares to haul picnickers, commuters, frieght and timber across Marin.

Ferry service to San Francisco became a hair-raising sport as captains pushed steamers to their limits to reach the San Francisco Ferry Building first.

New towns, hotels, picnic sites and campgrounds grew up along the sides of the North Pacific Coast tracks. By the late 19th Century San Rafael was the main shopping and stopping center for residents of the such new communities as Corte Madera, Larkspur, Kentfield, Ross, San Anselmo and Fairfax.

When Donahue died in November 1885 leaving a $4 million estate, the presidency of his railroad passed to his only son, James Mervyn Donahue, 25, owner of a palatial mansion on Petaluma (today's Lincoln) Avenue.

By then San Rafael had become a popular summer gathering place for families from throughout the Bay Area.

By the 1890s the North Pacific Coast was rolling 15 locomotives and 400 coaches and freight cars along its 81-mile of track from Sausalito to Cazadero. But the railroad, plagued by disastrous accidents and subsequent lawsuits, was sold in 1902 to a syndicate headed by John Martin and renamed the North Shore Railroad Co.

Twelve years earlier Donahue, owner of the rival San Francisco-North Pacific line, had died in San Francisco at the age of 29. Three years later, in 1893, the Marin County Superior Court ordered young Donahue's controlling interest in the railroad sold to settle his estate.

The SF&NP stock was purchased by two San Rafael men, Arthur W. Foster, an Irish-born, San Francisco financier who owned a 135-acre estate called Fairhills, and Sidney V. Smith Jr., son and namesake of a founder of the pioneer San Rafael and San Quentin Railroad.

Foster and Smith and a third partner, Andrew Markham of Sonoma County, formed a syndicate to control the SF&NP. Foster was named railroad president.

A few years later, after Smith and a group of New York financiers tired to seize control of the line, Foster outmaneuvered them by organizing the California Northwestern Railroad Co. to which he leased the SF&NP. The defeated Smith and his partners sold their interest in the railroad to Foster.

By 1902 as San Rafael's population approached 4,000, the North Shore Railroad became one of the first electric-powered railroads in the nation.

Rivalry between the North Shore and the San Francisco and North Pacific ended two years later when they were bought by the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads and merged into the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Co.

Following the merger the Tiburon ferry terminal closed and San Rafael commuters began riding the electric trains across the Ross Valley to ferries at Sausalito.

The automobile made its first appearance in San Rafael shortly after the turn of the century but was slow to gain popularity. At first horse-owning residents demanded ordinances restricting auto speed and noise, claiming the vehicles frightened and caused horses to bolt.

A network of county roads running from Sausalito across downtown San Rafael to Ignacio and the Marin-Sonoma boundary were taken over in 1909 by the state Division of Highways.

Redwood Highway, forerunner of today's Highway 101, ran along a circuitous route from Sausalito's Water Street (later Bridgeway) west into Mill Valley and over the hill to Corte Madera.

From there the two-lane road wound into Larkspur, Ross and San Anselmo where it turned east along today's Miracle Mile into San Rafael.

The highway snaked down Fourth Street to Grand Avenue, turned north to Linden Lane, then west onto today's Lincoln Avenue and on to the top of Puerto Suello Hill. From there it wound around Los Ranchitos Road to today's Terra Linda Interchange and then north to Novato and the county line.

Despite the automobile's increasing popularity in the 1920s the Northwestern Pacific continued to grow. New rolling stock, steamers and later diesel-powered auto ferries were added to the Marin-San Francisco run.

By 1920 railroad ferries and trains were carrying 18,756 passengers a day. At the end of the decade diesel auto ferries were leaving Sausalito every 15 minutes, 24 hours a day.

Southern Pacific Railroad Co. in 1929 acquired Northwestern Pacific.

That year the state began improving Redwood Highway.

Lincoln Avenue replaced Grand Avenue as San Rafael's northbound exit. A connecting two-lane road across Puerto Suello Hill bypassed Los Ranchitos Road and joined the existing highway north of today's Marin Civic Center.

Cross country traffic was rerouted away from Fourth Street when the state built a two-lane roadway extending from San Rafael to Alto.

Four years later, in 1933, Sausalito and San Rafael were linked by highway for the first time when the state extended the road from Alto south across a bridge built over the Richardson Bay to the old highway on Bridgeway.

The opening of the Golden Gate Bridge in May of 1937 made San Rafael accessible to San Francisco by automobile.

The bridge brought more and more automobiles to San Rafael and by 1940, 12,500 cars were passing through the city every day.

The pressure on city streets was tremendous and, as a result, a freeway which bypassed the center of the city was opened to the public in November 1941. It was the first freeway in Northern California and the second in the state.

Ironically, during World War II auto traffic through San Rafael fell to 9,200 cars a day by 1943.

As Marin's population began to climb at the end of the War, plans were made to build a second bridge from San Rafael to Richmond.

The proposal generated a great deal of local support in 1949 when employees of the San Rafael and Richmond Ferry Transportation Co. which operated trans-bay ferries went on strike for the third time in three years.

Construction of the Richmond-San Rafael Bridge began in March of 1953. Three years later, on Aug. 31, 1956, the first deck of the $68 million span opened linking San Rafael to the East Bay.

The bridge's second deck opened the following year.

During its first year the new 4.1 mile span carried 2,698,901 vehicles. Last year 8,350,497 crossed the bridge.

Between 1940 and 1970 Marin population mushroomed from 39,000 to more than 200,000, while San Rafael grew from 8,573 to 38,977.

One adverse effect of the population growth was increased congestion on the Golden Gate Bridge and along the Golden Gate corridor from Santa Rosa to San Francisco.

During 1970-71 approximately 92,000 vehicles were crossing the Golden Gate Bridge daily.

In the meantime Greyhound lines was reporting losses to the Public Utilities Commission and unsuccessfully trying to drop its bus franchise for Marin, just as its predecessor, the Northwestern Pacific, had done 30 years before when it halted its ferry service.

In 1969 Assemblyman John F. Foran, D-San Francisco, chairman of the Assembly Transportation Committee authored a bill that put the Golden Gate Bridge District into the transportation business.

The next year, a century after Marin's first railroad began transporting San Rafael commuters to waiting ferries at Point San Quentin, the Golden Gate Bridge, which had put Marin's ferries out of business 30 years before, began operating its own ferries between Sausalito and San Francisco.

Next Greyhound Lines won its fight to get out of the county when the Public Utilities Commission authorized the firm to turn over its Marin bus service to the bridge district in December 1971. That month the district's 154 buses started the Marin to San Francisco run.

By 1972 the district had 188 buses; 32 additional coaches are expected to be in service within the next few months.

Next year the district will open its Larkspur ferry terminal on 25 acres at the mouth of Corte Madera Creek. By that time there will be four bridge district ferries on the Marin-San Francisco run.

If Marin commuters continue to stick to private automobiles, studies predict that 47,000 commuters will be crossing the Golden Gate span by 1980. The bridge district is hoping to cut that figure in half through its growing transit system.

The district currently is studying several new modes of transportation, including an underground bus way from the bridge to downtown San Francisco and an underwater tube from San Francisco to Marin.

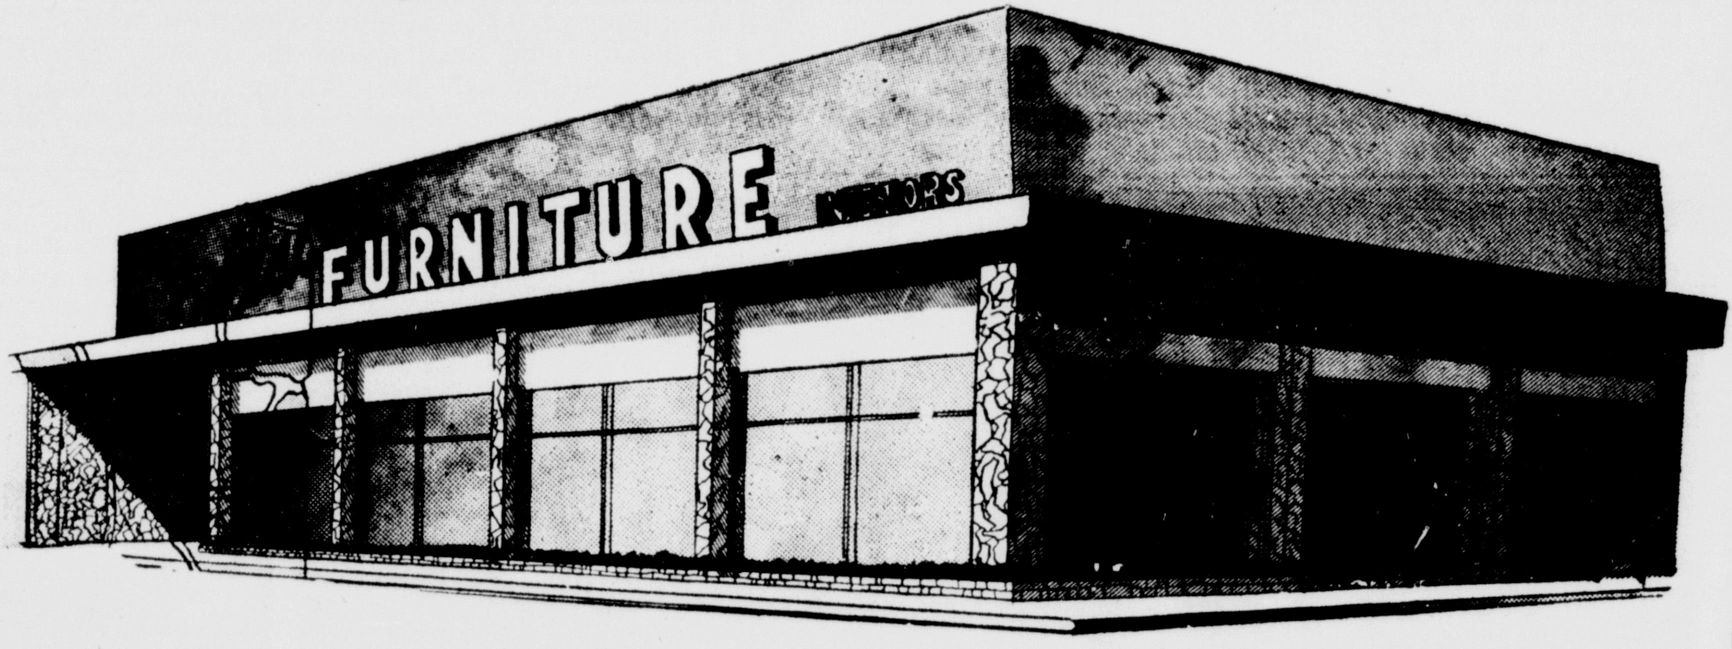
However, Marin was where the Bellachs wanted to live and do business and in five years this modest beginning developed to the present location just one block from the original store. The approach to furniture sales has been through the eyes of the family. The Bellachs insist that their customer be treated as they personally would like to be treated when shopping. The family aspect of this operation was so well evidenced in the years that the business survived wind storms that took out the large display windows, floods that crept in and damaged stock, and a fire that gutted the entire store. The family rallied together, everyone pitched in and Bellach's continued it's progress.



Bellach's second century? Who knows? But look at the handsome children in the picture on the left and one could figure that Bellach's will continue to be a great name in Marin furniture for some time . . . and with the same obsession for customer satisfaction with which they began. FOCUS OF A FIGHT — Highway 17 ends in eastern San Rafael (center background) after swooping across the Bay on the Richmond-San Rafael Bridge. But from the 1940s until the Marin County general plan was adopted last year, there were state and local officials who dreamed of extending Highway 17 as a major connector to West Marin. One proposal would have wound the freeway past San Quentin Prison through Ross Valley; another out the Miracle Mile, others through Terra Linda and Lucas Valley.

Postwar Battles Raged Over Route 17 Extension

By JEFF GREER

A plan to extend Highway 17 from San Rafael to West Marin must be considered a dead horse, politically.

Seldom was any horse flogged to death for so many reasons for so many years. But, legally, it isn't dead yet.

Had the state said in 1959, "We'll build a freeway to West Marin right now," Marinites probably would have been complacent and the road would be a reality today. Serious efforts to build a road to Point Reyes National Seashore began in 1959.

But bureaucracy and California's system of funding priorities for roadbuilding — with the lion's share going to Southern California — condemned Route 17 to a slow death.

Sacramento repeatedly told Marin the east-west link couldn't be built before the early 1970s or later. Meanwhile, the state Department of Public Works urged that Marin's officials, planners and citizens decide the best route for Highway 17.

The proposed freeway became so controversial a route was never even decided. Two years ago, the state Division of Highways pigeonholed the project, but left it listed as part of the eventual state freeway system.

"You could almost class it as dead," Dist. Engineer Thomas R. Lammers of the Division of Highways reported recently.

Citizens who were part of the long debate say the fate of Route 17 is a prime example of the way Marinites have changed their thinking about the county's future in the years since World War II.

The Division of Highways also has changed its thinking in recent years — but that hasn't prevented Route 17 from being branded "politically unbuildable."

During Marin's postwar boom years, everyone assumed empty West Marin was sure to fill with people. Planning centered on how best to serve the future population.

Mary Summers, the county's second planning director, and Dan P. Coleman, author of one of San Rafael's earliest master plans, each called for some sort of a road from Highway 101 to West Marin. It was grandly but vaguely brushed into the maps of early master plans, and generally was envisioned as some sort of scenic parkway.

Many homeowner organizations and businessmen pressed the state to build it quickly. In January, 1959, John F. McCarthy, then Marin's state senator, authored a bill calling for the state to build a new highway from San Rafael to Novato.

It was to loop through San Anselmo, Fairfax and Nicasio with a spur stretching westward from Nicasio to join the Shoreline Highway somewhere near Olema.

The San Rafael and San Anselmo chambers of commerce applauded. Richard A. Kientz, then a leader in the Hub chamber, recalled that the San Anselmo City Council was so hesitant about the plan that a rift developed between the chamber and city hall.

In June, 1959, Gov. Edmund G. Brown signed a law ordering a highway built between Highway 101 in the Greenbrae-San Rafael area to Shoreline Highway, and upgrading Shoreline Highway to freeway status from the Golden Gate to Sonoma County.

The romance began to chill that September. Richard L. Shirley, manager of the San Rafael Chamber of Commerce, reported that the state wanted to build a full-scale, fenced freeway through San Rafael and the Miracle Mile. Local leaders had envisioned a parkway or expressway, with grade-level intersections.

The first opposition to Route 17 began to form.

"It'll cut San Rafael, San Anselmo and Fairfax in half."

". . . We still want an east-west route but in somebody else's yard," was the stand taken by most Central Marin cities and citizens.

The state Division of Highways possessed scant patience for dissent in those years. At a crowded hearing on Aug. 9, 1960, state spokesmen declared the east-west route issue must be settled before the state would do anything about widening the Highway 101 viaduct through San Rafael — then a devoutly desired improvement.

At that time, the proposed link between Highway 101 and West Marin was labeled Route 69, rather than Route 17.

At the hearing, presided over by San Rafael's Vice Mayor, Dr. Charles W. Aby, downtown merchants and property owners protested that Route 69 would congest traffic in the Third Street area.

At a San Anselmo luncheon late that year, T. Fred Bagshaw, assistant director of the state Department of Public Works, said the route plans should be decided by the end of 1961, but it would be five to ten years before construction began. Bagshaw previously had been chairman of the Marin Board of Supervisors.

Planner Coleman drafted an alternate scheme with an offramp from Highway 101 at Third and Irwin Streets, feeding out First Street to the Miracle Mile, along Center Boulevard through San Anselmo, and looping into Sir Francis Drake Boulevard in Fairfax.

Development of the Northgate Mall shopping center spurred suggestions in the early 1960s for a more northerly route, linking Terra Linda and San Anselmo with a new road to West Marin. Sleepy Hollow's reaction was instant hostility.

The impasse dropped through 1964, with San Anselmo's Kientz and San Rafael chamber Manager Jack Alvorado still plumping for a downtown San Rafael route. A tri-city meeting of civic leaders, merchants and citizens that October couldn't untie the Gordian knot. Selecting the eventual route was expected to take "another six to nine months," participants reported.

The Fairfax Town Council declared it wanted no freeway bisecting the town, but supported Supervisor Ernest N. Kettenhofen's suggestion, sometimes called "Route K."

That idea was to extend Highway 17 from East San Rafael to the Marin County Civic Center, then across the ridgetops to Sir Francis Drake Boulevard at White's Hill. It was a child of the old county highways plan prepared by Mary Summers.

Vestiges of the idea remain

As Marin Grew, Highway 17 Turned Out 'Unbuildable'

in the 1973 Marin Countywide Plan, in the waterfront link from the Richmond Bridge to a proposed ferry terminal on Gallinas Creek.

State engineers drew maps of four major east-west route proposals, with a network of alternatives. The main ones unveiled in September, 1966, were:

SOUTHERN CORRIDOR — From the Richmond Bridge along Sir Francis Drake Boulevard through Greenbrae, Kentfield, Ross, San Anselmo and Fairfax, at an estimated cost of $95 million to $100 million.

CENTRAL CORRIDOR — From San Rafael's Second Street to Fairfax via the Miracle Mile and the Hub, at an estimated cost of $87 million to $100 million.

RIDGE CORRIDOR — Through Terra Linda up the ridge to Sleepy Hollow past San Domenico School to White's Hill, at a cost of $55 million to $88 million.

LUCAS VALLEY CORRIDOR — Paralleling Lucas Valley Road to Big Rock, then along Bull Tail Valley and Halleck Creek to Nicasio, at a cost of about $37 million.

Engineers argued that the central corridor gave the best traffic relief to San Rafael and the upper Ross Valley.

Increasing community schism over which route to build resulted in a 3-2 vote of the county supervisors in November, 1966, to ask the state to postpone its planned route hearings for four months. The state went ahead with its hearings in December — and all routes were strongly opposed.

Onlookers at the hearing, held in a movie theater because no other auditorium was large enough, compared it to the Boston Tea Party and San Francisco's revolt against the Embarcadero Freeway that left it a sore, amputated thumb. The state backed off, saying it would do nothing until Marin changed its mind.

Yet the San Rafael planning commission voted in September, 1967, for the central corridor declaring it would be "important to the proper development of the city." Commissioner Jorgen V. Lunding said the idea could "save the downtown."

The Marin Citizens Transportation Committee soon afterwards asked the county supervisors to delete Route 17 altogether from the list of future freeways in Marin, partly because state policy at the time was not to fund planning or construction for anything less than full-scale freeways.

San Anselmo city councilmen declared in March, 1969, that the city wouldn't widen or improve any major street until the state agreed that Highway 17 would bypass the city entirely.

On the other end of the seesaw, the transportation committee of the Marin County Chamber of Commerce and Visitors Bureau asked in September, 1970, that the state give Route 17 top funding priority in the 1972-73 highway budget.

The public disagreed and a new argument was becoming more loudly heard:

"POLITICALLY UNBUILDABLE" — Highway 17 was never extended to West Marin even through state highway engineers and local officials wrestled for years to find a route that might be acceptable to Marinites. At the height of the debate in 1966, this maze of alternate routes was under study. Still other were added later by former Supervisor Ernest N. Kettenhofen (the controversial 'K Route') and others. During the more than 15 years that the extension was a live issue, routes ranging from 'A' through 'Y' were studied — and eventually scrapped as "politically unbuildable."

"Building Highway 17 will encourage undesirable population buildup in the San Geronimo Valley and West Marin."

The argument was linked with growing public outcry to preserve the open spaces of Lucas Valley, the ridge between Terra Linda and Sleepy Hollow and the hills and fields of the San Geronimo Valley and West Marin.

Community groups voted to go into bonded debt to buy open space, the old San Geronimo Valley master plan was scrapped, and a new West Marin Master Plan and the countywide plan called for preserving the rural atmosphere of all of Marin outside the so-called "urbanized corridor" along Highway 101.

In May, 1973, county supervisors rooted out the last vestige of the old Route 17 west of Highway 101. They voted 4-0 to drop from a countywide plan a connector road linking upper Lucas Valley with Sir Francis Drake Boulevard at White's Hill.

Chairman Arnold M. Baptiste abstained from voting because he wanted more data on the need of roads to serve tourist traffic to the seashore. Supervisor Michael Wornum also cautioned that he might change his mind if studies showed that the existing east-west roads would bottleneck seashore traffic too badly.

Only the Irate Taxpayers of Marin, at the board hearing, defended further consideration of a new east-west route — and then only if it avoided all populated areas. Every other speaker urged "kill the connector."

Other voices outside the Marin Civic Center still are warning that by 1990 today's Marin citizens and officials may be branded as short-sighted.

"We're under a moral obligation to provide some sort of transportation corridor to Point Reyes National Seashore," according to Kettenhofen, one former supervisor.

He charged that Route 17 died under the blows of "the elitist conservationist . . . those people who believe a glutted street will deter more people from coming to Marin.

"The last Marin man to arrive immediately turns around and says, 'Don't let the next man in,'" Kettenhofen charged. "They're getting all of West Marin as a recreation area without paying" landowners for it, through policies such as the A-60 zoning, he added.

Former Supervisor Louis H. (Bud) Baar was a San Rafael city councilman when the council voted to oust Route 17 from the city during the mid-60s.

"The thing that cooled me off was the cloud on everybody's property" caused by the long delay between route adoption and actual construction, Baar explained. The delay would have depressed property values and halted development all along the route, he said.

Both Baar and Coleman noted that the public's early fears that the freeway would split the communities later gave way to ecological reasons. Both men questioned whether present antigrowth policies could eliminate all need for a future corridor to West Marin.

"The political climate is such that I don't think you'll ever see" a Highway 17 built, Baar admitted.

San Rafael's Mayor C. Paul Bettini said, "Now everybody's leaning toward rapid transit. I'm happy without the freeway; I think we've resolved a local problem ourselves."

Supervisor Robert A. Roumiguiere of San Rafael joined fellow board members Baptiste of Novato and Wornum of Mill Valley in recognizing that there are pressures to build a road to the Point Reyes National Seashore, after "the federal government spent millions on it . . .

"But the people today just don't want a new highway through their residential areas" or through open space they've bonded themselves to protect, Roumiguire added.

The insistence of the 50s and 60s on full freeways with their fences, costly interchanges and scenery-marring cuts, has faded from the state policy.

SAN RAFAEL COMPANY PRODUCES TOOLS WHICH HAVE HOLES ONE-QUARTER THE DIAMETER OF A HUMAN HAIR

Small Precision Tools, Inc., has been growing with San Rafael since 1969. For the first two years, the company was located on Mitchell Boulevard. As business volume increased, more space was required, and SPT moved to its present international headquarters located at 28 Paul Drive, Northgate Industrial Park.

Small Precision Tools serves the semiconductor industry internationally by producing bonding tools, etc., used in assembly of transistors and integrated circuits. These tools are made from extremely hard tungsten carbides or ceramic materials normally used as cutting tools. The functional portions of these tools are smaller than a human hair with holes through them one-quarter the diameter of a human hair. Machining tolerances are closer than one-fiftieth of a human hair.

About 60 people are currently employed — twice as many as a year ago. The company has been employing people not previously experienced and training them in the art of microminiature machining. With continued growth the company should expand to reach 100 employees during the coming year.

He charged that Route 17 died under the blows of "the elitist conservationist . . . those people who believe a glutted street will deter more people from coming to Marin.

"The last Marin man to arrive immediately turns around and says, 'Don't let the next man in,'" Kettenhofen charged. "They're getting all of West Marin as a recreation area without paying" landowners for it, through policies such as the A-60 zoning, he added.

Former Supervisor Louis H. (Bud) Baar was a San Rafael city councilman when the council voted to oust Route 17 from the city during the mid-60s.

"The thing that cooled me off was the cloud on everybody's property" caused by the long delay between route adoption and actual construction, Baar explained. The delay would have depressed property values and halted development all along the route, he said.

Both Baar and Coleman noted that the public's early fears that the freeway would split the communities later gave way to ecological reasons. Both men questioned whether present antigrowth policies could eliminate all need for a future corridor to West Marin.

"The political climate is such that I don't think you'll ever see" a Highway 17 built, Baar admitted.

San Rafael's Mayor C. Paul Bettini said, "Now everybody's leaning toward rapid transit. I'm happy without the freeway; I think we've resolved a local problem ourselves."

Supervisor Robert A. Roumiguiere of San Rafael joined fellow board members Baptiste of Novato and Wornum of Mill Valley in recognizing that there are pressures to build a road to the Point Reyes National Seashore, after "the federal government spent millions on it . . .

"But the people today just don't want a new highway through their residential areas" or through open space they've bonded themselves to protect, Roumiguire added.

The insistence of the 50s and 60s on full freeways with their fences, costly interchanges and scenery-marring cuts, has faded from the state policy.

SAN RAFAEL COMPANY PRODUCES TOOLS WHICH HAVE HOLES ONE-QUARTER THE DIAMETER OF A HUMAN HAIR

Small Precision Tools, Inc., has been growing with San Rafael since 1969. For the first two years, the company was located on Mitchell Boulevard. As business volume increased, more space was required, and SPT moved to its present international headquarters located at 28 Paul Drive, Northgate Industrial Park.

Small Precision Tools serves the semiconductor industry internationally by producing bonding tools, etc., used in assembly of transistors and integrated circuits. These tools are made from extremely hard tungsten carbides or ceramic materials normally used as cutting tools. The functional portions of these tools are smaller than a human hair with holes through them one-quarter the diameter of a human hair. Machining tolerances are closer than one-fiftieth of a human hair.

About 60 people are currently employed — twice as many as a year ago. The company has been employing people not previously experienced and training them in the art of microminiature machining. With continued growth the company should expand to reach 100 employees during the coming year.

The management and employees of Small Precision Tools extend their congratulations to San Rafael on its Centennial.

HISTORIC CONVENT — The motherhouse of the Dominican Order in San Rafael is shown as it looked a few weeks after its dedication in July 1889. Now the gracious, tree-shaded building is the center of a college campus that has gained wide renown for its educational offerings to both men and women.

Dominican College's Long, Bright Story

A century ago San Rafael's Dominican College was nothing more than a gleam in the eyes of a band of hardy Dominican Sisters who thought nothing of crossing the Isthmus of Panama on muleback to bring Catholic education to the West.

Throughout the years since its founding, Dominican has brought countless students, famous writers, musicians, political figures and celebrities from all walks of life to visit, study and lecture on its 100-acre campus.

The college's story began in 1850 when three sisters arrived in San Francisco from the East after crossing the Isthmus on mules. Their leader, Mother Mary Goemaere, O.P., earlier that year had crossed the Atlantic Ocean from Paris, intent on doing missionary work in California.

The sisters opened California's first girl's school in Monterey where they taught Latin, logic, philosophy, mathematics, French, music and plain and fancy needlework to their Spanish-speaking students.

Four years later they moved the school to the new state capital at Benicia on the Carquinez Straits.

Soon other Dominican schools were opened in San Francisco, Stockton, San Leandro and Vallejo. And in 1887, at the urging of the 35-year-old Mother Mary Louis O'Donnell, O.P., plans were made to move the order's motherhouse from Benicia to San Rafael.

William Tell Coleman, one-time San Francisco Vigilante leader and a wealthy San Rafael developer sold the sisters 10 acres in Magnolia Valley for $20,000 — donating half the purchase price.

Construction of the four-story redwood frame structure at Grand and Locust Avenues was underway by 1888. At the time there were only two structures of comparable size in the community: the newly built Hotel Rafael and the 15-year-old Marin County Courthouse.

The red-turreted Convent, a landmark for almost nine decades, was dedicated as the College of the Holy Rosary (a name never used publicly) on July 21, 1889.

Two weeks later Mother Louis, a few sisters and postulants moved into the high ceilinged building, illuminated by dim-burning gas lights. (The building later was one of the first in San Rafael to be wired).

From the beginning the daughters of California's leading families, including Francesca Vallejo, daughter of General Mariano Vallejo, one-time Mexican military commandant of California, came to San Rafael to study geometry, classics, natural philosophy, language, religion and music.

In the beginning while the young boarders were tucked into warm beds, the sisters who were forced to sell candy to the children to pay for linoleums and table coverings) slept on mattresses on bare floors.

Mother Louis in 1890 received a charter from the state for the establishment of a women's college, but a decade and a half would pass before that college became a reality.

In 1902 Dominican's upper and lower schools (elementary and secondary schools) became among the first accredited in California, with the upper school emerging as one of the top-ranking preparatory schools in the nation.

Both schools, renamed San Domenico School for Girls, were moved from the San Rafael campus to Sleepy Hollow in 1965.

Three years later, in 1918, with the purchase of Meadowlands, the former Michael de Young estate at the corner of Palm and Acacia avenues, they founded Marin's first four-year liberal arts college.

"From the beginning we had an excellent faculty," said Sister Mary Patrick Harney, O.P., former Dominican College president who graduated with the first four-year class in 1922.

"The University of California gave the college guidance and encouragement, even allowing its professors to teach here on a part-time basis," she added.

In 1922 UC officially recognized Dominican and two years later the State Board of Education empowered the college to recommend students for elementary and secondary teaching credentials.

Dominican in 1926 became the first Catholic college in the West listed by the Association of American Universities, and in 1945 became a member of the Western College Association.

After the college was approved by the American Association of University Women in 1931, the organization's Marin Branch was founded there the same year.

For 38 summers beginning in 1932 the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. used the San Rafael campus as its Pacific Coast Branch.

With the purchase of the former de Young, Babcock and Buck estates and Forest Meadows, a 30-acre tract west of Grand Avenue purchased in 1927, the campus grew from the original 10 to 100 acres by the late 1930s.

Schools Face Decline In Enrollment A Second Time

By BRYCE W. ANDERSON

One hundred years after the incorporation of San Rafael, the city's public schools confront a problem that has occurred only once before during the century: declining enrollment.

Enrollment in San Rafael and Dixie Elementary School Districts, both of which are largely within the city, will decline next fall for the fifth and sixth consecutive year, respectively. And now the decline is reaching into the high schools.

Supt. Donald E. Leisey of San Rafael schools is basing his planning for the 1974-75 school year on a projected decline of 190 pupils in first through eighth grades and 45 in high school. Supt. Clifford W. Campbell of Dixie district forecasts a drop of 220 in its elementary school enrollment.

San Rfael's elementary enrollment peaked at 5,066 in the 1968-69 school year and s now down to 4,200. High school enrollment peaked at 4,320 in 1972-73 and dropped to 4,164 this year. Dixie's top enrollment was 4,900 in 1968-69; its current tally is 4,006.

The only previous period when San Rafael public school enrollment declined was in the 1930s. Then, as now, there was a low birth rate. Enrollment at elementary schools in the city system dropped from 778 in 1931-32 to 643 in 1935-36, although high school enrollment increased each year.

Completion of the Golden Gate Bridge, bringing an influx of new residents to Marin County, ended that decline.

The enrollment dip in the '30s did not result in a reduction of the number of schools. But this time it will. Historic West End School will close it) doors at the end of the current term.

However, unconvinced that the decline will continue indefinitely, the San Rafael Board of Education plans to hold on to the school property in case West End is needed again.

San Rafael got its first public school 13 years before its incorporation.

A private school, the San Rafael Institute, had been established on the northeast corner of the Fourth and E streets intersection.

In 1861, County Schools Supt. Thomas J. Ables persuaded the Marin County Board of Supervisors to levy a 10-cent tax for public schools, and the San Rafael Institute was taken over as the first public school in San Rafael. It had 25 elementary grade pupils enrolled, with Julia C. Gilbert as teacher.

The first San Rafael school board, appointed by the county superintendent to get a public school into operation, was composed of Rev. H. Gilbert, a Southern Baptist minister who was the teacher's father; Oliver Irwin, and County Judge R. B. Frank.

The school remained at that location only one year. John Simms offered to donate a lot on the southeast corner of B Street at Fifth Avenue for a school site and to advance the money for construction. A 26-by-40 foot frame building was completed by April 1862, and the school moved to a location now occupied in the Independent Journal.

The first school there was soon outgrown. Several bond issues to construct an addition were defeated — voters being no more receptive to school bond issues in the 1860s than they would be in the 1960s. But in March 1869, voters approved a special tax to raise $3,250 for a two-story, four-room building on the B Street site. It was completed the following year.

By the time San Rafael incorporated in 1874, the larger building was becoming crowded. And from then until now, the city's schools have had a history of adding classrooms rather than abandoning them — although in a few cases a school has been closed because of change of the neighborhood's character from residential to commerical, or — as with the old San Pedro and San Quentin schools —absorption of small schools by larger ones within busing distance.

The Dixie district's first school building also was on land donated by a public-spirited citizen, James Miller. The building was a one-story structured that was to serve for many years, until subdivision of Las Gallinas Valley ranchlands sent Dixie enrollment into orbit in the early 1950s.

Public education ended at the eighth grade in San Rafael when the town was incorporated. San Rafael High School — the first public high school in Marin County — was not opened until 1888.

It was housed in one room of what was then a new grammar school at Fourth and Shaver streets, with C. S. Smythe the teaching principal at a salary of $140 a month and F. C. Crofts his assistant (serving also in the grammar school) at $100 a month. The building had been financed by a $25,000 bond issue approved by the voters in April 1885.

Only 11 students completed the first term. But there was immediate clamor for enrollment — not only from San Rafael itself, but also from other parts of the county, which had no high school. The second year, a two-story addition was addd at a cost of $2,350.

On June 5, 1891, San Rafael High School graduated its first senior class. Since the school had no auditorium, the commencement exercises were held in Gordon's Opera House on the south side of Fourth Street between C and D streets.

Five boys and four girls made up the class in that first of a long line of San Rafael High School graduations of which the 84th will be next month. They were Walter N. and Frank E. Ross, Ellery B. Moore, Olcott Haskell, James J. Connolly, Margaret H. Smythe (the principal's daughter), Chrissie Mann, Nellie Miller, and Mary Elliott.

According to Marin historian George D. Harlan, who was an underclassman at San Rafael High that year, "the leading student in the senior class was Olcott Haskell, who became a Christian Science practitioner and lived in Sausalito."

It soon became apparent that merely adding to an elementary school building was insufficient to accommodate the high school needs, but a bond isue to build a high school was defeated in 1893. Five years later, voters finally approved the funds.

The site chosen for the high school was near the Fourth and E streets intersection, but not on the same property as the former San Rafael Institute. An old cemetery site on E Street between Third and Fourth was purchased. The high school opened in the fall of 1898 in a 15-classroom building at that location, which also had a combination gymnasium and assembly hall. The building later served as an elementary school and now houses San Rafael school administration offices — although it bears little resemblance to the two-story brick structure that opened with great fanfare 76 years ago.

The building was destind to play dual roles at two widely separated times. One room of it housed the San Rafael Public Library until a part of the current library at Fifth Avenue and E Street was built with Carnegie Foundation funds in 1908. Many years later, a wing of what had become known as the E Street School was temporary home of the city public works department until completion of the new city hall.

The late Florence Donnelly, in an article on the hisotry of San Rafael High School which was published in the Independent-Journal's Marin Magazine of Sept. 19, 1970, noted that in that first high school building "there were no lockers for personal possessions, so that everything was kept in the pupils' desks. Yet seldom were articles pilfered."

FIRST HIGH SCHOOL — This building at Third and E streets was the first built to house a high school in San Rafael. Later the upper story was removed and the building remodeled into the E Street School. Part of it is still there, although unrecognizable, being now the San Rafael city schools administration building.

DIXIE DISTRICT'S FIRST SCHOOL — This little schoolhouse was built on land donated to the Dixie School District by James Miller in 1874, and served the district until the population explosion of the 1950s. It recently was moved to a new site — still on school district property — and remains in use as a historical museum. Standing on the steps in this photo is Mrs. Thomas Burke of San Rafael, the former Josephine Leary, who was the last teacher in the little school.

The curriculum of San Rafael High School in its early years combined the academic pattern then in vogue with a rather unusual offering of commercial courses. Required courses included Latin, algebra, plane geometry, and ancient, medieval and American history. The same courses were required in San Francisco's Lowell High School in 1900, except that it had a four-track system which also included French and German in the "modern language" track and Greek in the "scientific" track. Lowell frowned on such things as commercial courses.

Although elementary school enrollment ocntinued to grow, the number of pupils at San Rafael High began to decline as the decade of the 1920s began. The decline caused concern among the San Rafael citizenry.

An effort for a new high school building was begun by the San Rafael Chamber of Commerce in 1921. This led to commissioning of a survey by University of California's Bureau of School Research the following year. The study branded the city's school buildings outmoded and inadequate, and recommended building a high school for 500 students, with athletic fields, bymnasium, recreation grounds, and gardens.

That brought action. On March 6, 1923, a $290,000 high school bond issue and $210,000 elementary school bond issue were approved, both by votes of approximately 10-to-1. The first elementary school built with the proceeds of that bond issue was the West End School, which soon will close its doors after a half century of service.

After much discussion of high school sites, the San Rafael Board of Education settled on what was known as the Fourth Street Extension site, 27 acres bounded by Third Street and Mission Avenue, Mary Street and Embarcadero.

San Rafael High School remains on that site. Numerous additions have been built over the years. And in September, 1960, the practice of keeping all San Rafael's high school students on one campus ended with opening of Terra Linda High School on what had been aprt of the Freitas Ranch in Las Gallinas Valley.

Meanwhile, what had begun as the San Rafael City School District became two districts — although governed by the same board — as a result of state laws calling for union high school districts and later requiring that every elementary district be part of a high school district. Dixie, San Pedro, San Quentin, San Jose and Novato elementary districts were taken into San Rafael High School District. Novato in the mid-1950s pulled out to become a unified district — elementary and high schools combined. San Jose later was merged with Novato. San Pedro and San Quentin were absorbed by the San Rafael elementary district. But Dixie remains a separate elementary district within San Rafael High School District and now largely with the city limits.

The San Rafael and Dixie districts now have combined enrollments of 12,370, with 14 elementary schools (down to 13 next fall) and two high schools operated by the city system, and 10 elementary schools operated by Dixie district.

But the problems facing the schools as San Rafael starts its second century may differ more in size than in character from those during the city's first 100 years.

Leisey, looking ahead to what he hopes will be the trend over the next few years, recently said that "during the 1960s, the schools were concerned mostly with processes.

"I think we re beginning to return the emphasis to content —what is taught in the classroom rather than how it is taught," he added. "I see us coming back to reality."

Leisey noted also the wide demand for school accountability —of which one of the more dramatic illustrations is a current $1 million suit against San Francisco Unified School District on a complaint that it graduated a youth from high school without teaching him to read and misrepresented his progress in reports to his parents.

Accountability and emphasis on what was then called classicism were at the heart of a dispute in the San Rafael schools 66 years ago which resulted in the resignation of John S. Drew as combination superintendent and high school principal.

On June 16, 1908, the board of education voted to have "a competent person" examine students who failed to graduate. Drew resigned in a huff, declaring that this impeached him as he had already ruled on the students' qualifications for graduation. He sold his home on Harcourt Street in San Rafael and moved to San Francisco to establish Drew School, which for many years was considered one of the best private preparatory schools in Northern California.

As Drew's replacement, the baord hird E. M. Cox of Santa Rosa, who had just quit as superintendent there, also in a huff. Drew was a "classicist." Cox promised "more practical courses" in the high school.

In connection with the emphasis on processes, Leisey noted the growth of various types of "alternative schools," of which San Rafael now has three in the high school district. He expressed doubt they will continue to proliferate.

"One might die and another might emerge, but I don't see a substantial increase," he said.

The "alternative" Cox promised in 1908 was more "practical" (i.e., vocational) courses. The "alternative" when San Rafael High School was established was provided by the commercial courses. Leisey was unwilling to predict what new "alternatives" may replace some of those now being offered. They will be whatever the community demands, he suggested.

Governor Reagan Sends Centennial Best Wishes

The following message from Gov. Ronald Reagan was received by the San Rafael Centennial Committee:

"As governor of California, it gives me great pleasure to extend congratulations to the City of San Rafael on this centennial year.

"From the pioneers of 1874 to the leaders of today, San Rafael has had men of vision and purpose guiding its development and progress. I share with you the pride felt today, for it is truly an historic moment. I am confident the City of San Rafael will continue to provide its citizens with the very best leadership and community facilities that make it a wonderful place in which to live and work.

"Best wishes for a memorable centennial observance and for many more years of success and achievement in the future.

"Sincerely, Ronald Reagan, Governor."

Early Subdivision Plans Announced

William J. Miller has bought a large tract of land at Fourth and Shaver Street that he plans to subdivide, reported the Marin County Journal on Feb. 27, 1879. He intends to widen Shaver Street and build new connecting streets through the tract, according to the article.

Miller, elected to the town's first board of trustees in 1874, was the builder, in 1871, of today's Marin Hotel at Fourth and A streets.

First Phonograph

The phonograph — which had just been invented — was demonstrated in January 1889 at the San Rafael Library, according to the Marin Journal. At the time, the paper reported, there were two or three "talking machines" on the coast and San Rafael "is lucky to get the chance to hear and see one."

INDUSTRY'S BEGINNING — A small brickyard east of San Rafael that had its beginnings in the 1850s looked like this in 1896, two years before John A. McNear and his son took over the firm. By the turn of the century, the McNear kilns were pouring out 80,000 bricks daily. They went into many North Bay buildings before and after the great earthquake of 1906.

RECREATION CENTER — McNear's beach, shown in this 1906 campsite scene, has for decades been a popular recreation spot. It now is a county park on the shores of San Pedro Point.

McNear Dreamed Of Industries Booming East Of San Rafael

John Augustus McNear, a 19th Century industrial giant who owned Point San Pedro, was the first to envision the San Rafael region as an industrial center.

Although the 1906 earthquake shattered his dream of an industrial empire, a family-owned business he started 76 years ago is still manufacturing and selling building materials across Northern California.

The seventh-generation New Englander arrived in California in 1856. Settling in Petaluma, he parlayed $3,000 in life savings into a multimillion dollar fortune in investments in real estate, transit, shipping, utilities, concrete manufacturing and warehousing.

He and a brother, George W. McNear, who later in the 1890s became West Coast "wheat king," in 1859 paid $35,000 for 700 acres at Point San Pedro.

When the partnership dissolved, John McNear became sole owner of the Marin land. Gradually he increased his holdings to 2,500 acres extending along the bay shoreline from today's Santa Venetia to Glenwood.

McNear's Point, where his descendents still operate two family-owned corporations, The McNear Co. and L.P. McNear Brick Co., and McNear Beach, where he built a summer home in the 1870s were named for the pioneer.

His descendents sold Peacock Gap and Glenwood in the mid-1950s for residential development.

McNear, founder of the Sonoma County Water Co. and organizer of the Petaluma and Santa Rosa Railroad, in 1864, became the first manufacturer of concrete. Six years later he was the first to use reinforced concrete in building a reservoir on his Marin land.

In 1865, nine years before San Rafael's incorporation, McNear's steamers began running between Petaluma, McNear's Point and San Francisco. Soon McNear was planning to develop his Marin land into an industrial center linked to San Rafael by railroad.

In 1898, McNear and a son, Erskine B. McNear Sr., took over operation of a small brick company started on McNear's Point in the 1850s.

Expanding the operation and building a new kiln, the McNears were soon barging some 80,000 bricks daily to Bay Area port towns.

McNear brick was used in building structures in San Francisco, Oakland and Petaluma before and after the 1906 earthquake.

Around this time, thousands of Chinese were living in communities built on stilts along McNear's shoreline.

Chinese began coming to the area north of McNear Beach in the mid-1800s when the region had been a relay point for coolie laborers smuggled into the country to work on construction of the Central Pacific Railroad.

When most railroad work was finished in 1880, many of the Chinese rushed to San Francisco for jobs only to be driven out by the 1882 Exclusion Act.

But McNear gave the Chinese permission to settle his shoreline. In the vicinity of today's China Camp they built communities over the Bay waters and fished for shrimp and sturgeon until public opinion allowed them to return to San Francisco following the 1906 earthquake.

Chinese working for McNear laid the road through eastern San Rafael, that became San Pedro Road when McNear later gave it to the county.

McNear's dream of a Marin industrial center ended in 1906 when financial backers withdrew funds to help rebuild San Francisco.

TYCOON — John Augustus McNear, shown at the age of 17 in the top photograph, paid tribute to his Scottish ancestry by wearing a tartan vest. The seventh-generation New Englander came West to Petaluma in 1856 to make his fortune. McNear is shown below as an elderly man.

John McNear died in Petaluma at 86 in 1918, but his son, Erskine, and his descendants remained on the land, operating the brick company and a dairy ranch on the pastureland surrounding McNear's Point.

The large Chinese colony began leaving the area in 1910 after the state planted bass in a San Pablo Cove and placed restrictions on net fishing.

One, Quan Nock Quock, remained behind to develop a net that released the bass and retained the smaller shrimp. His company, called Yick Yuen, becme one of the Bay Area's biggest shrimp suppliers.

The company, later taken over by his son and daughter-in-law, Henry and Grace Quan, flourished until water pollution destroyed the local industry, driving the catch almost down to nothing.

In the early 1930s a whaling station was located on the eastern side of McNear's Point and for a decade beginning in the 1930s the site was occupied by a plant that made fertilizer from sardines.

As the demand for brick declined during the depression, The McNear Co. switched to manufacturing aggregate and in the early 1940s, added lightweight concrete block to its line.

At the end of World War II, Erskine McNear's son, Lawrence P. McNear Sr., went back into the brick business, founding the L.P. McNear Brick Co.

For the last three decades the two family-owned firms have been operating side by side on McNear's Point.

Both firms, incorporated three years ago when the family sold McNear's Point for $4 million to the Dillingham Corp. of Hawaii, will continue operating on the Point, according to John E. McNear, president of the L.P. McNear Brick Co.

The McNears hold a 20-year lease on the property with Dillingham's subsidiary, the Basalt Rock Co., which has quarried rock for 27 years on the property.

When the lease expires in 1991, McNear said, "we'll renew it."

McNear Beach where the family's founder and his descendants summered for decades, is now part of the Marin County park system.

At the end of World War II, Erskine McNear's son, Lawrence P. McNear Sr., went back into the brick business, founding the L.P. McNear Brick Co.

For the last three decades the two family-owned firms have been operating side by side on McNear's Point.

Both firms, incorporated three years ago when the family sold McNear's Point for $4 million to the Dillingham Corp. of Hawaii, will continue operating on the Point, according to John E. McNear, president of the L.P. McNear Brick Co.

The McNears hold a 20-year lease on the property with Dillingham's subsidiary, the Basalt Rock Co., which has quarried rock for 27 years on the property.

When the lease expires in 1991, McNear said, "we'll renew it."

McNear Beach where the family's founder and his descendants summered for decades, is now part of the Marin County park system.

San Rafael As Its Founding Fathers Saw It Begin

By DOROTHY GARDINER

When San Rafael was incorporated as Marin County's first self-governing municipality on Feb. 18, 1874 the town had already come a long way.

Twenty-four years earlier, in 1850, it had been a tiny frontier town where a handful of English and Spanish-speaking settlers and squatters lived in a cluster of adobe dwellings and shanties in an isolated basin at the foot of the San Rafael Hill.

The buildings had gone up around the run-down ruins of the old adobe and tile Mission San Rafael Arcangel, founded in the wilderness in 1817 by Spanish Franciscan missionaries.

The main mission buildings, later razed by a carpenter in 1861 for usable timbers, stood in the vicinity of today's St. Raphael's Church.

A number of tile-roofed adobe huts, used as Indian quarters until the Mission was closed by the Mexican government in 1834, were still standing but rapidly going to ruin as late as the mid 1860s.

Where east-bound commute traffic today is jammed bumper-to-bumper along Second Street, tidewater in 1850 lapped against the banks of the navigable San Rafael Creek that meandered from the bay across town to the end of today's G Street.

For years, the rotting hull of a whaleboat lay beached and abandoned on the creek bank at C Street.

Sailors coming up the creek stayed at a building near B and Bayview streets, near a slaughterhouse that had been opened by Robert Clark, George Scribner and Thomas and William Moylan.

The town's "main support," according to an account of pioneer Archie C. McAllister, was derived from its role as the county seat and "the large amount of litigation in settling land titles." But also, in the 50s and 60s, hard-riding vaqueros were still driving herds of longhorn steers down Fourtn Street to the slaughterhouse.

Logging was Marin's biggest business in 1850. Trees were cut, rolled and dragged from the slopes of Mount Tamalpais, the hills of today's Mill Valley, Corte Madera and the ridges running between Olema and Point Reyes, as hundreds of men worked in the woods across the county.

Logs were loaded aboard schooners for shipment to San Francisco, where a shanty town of tents and clapboard buildings was transformed into a city with the lumber taken from the Marin countryside.

In 1850, 12 buildings, including barns and stables, lined San Rafael's dirt streets. The town had been laid out in 300-square-foot blocks that year by two surveyors, Myers and McCullough. The first store, located in a one-story, two-room frame structure on C Street near Fourth Street had been opened in November by forty-niners John A. Davis and Daniel Taylor.

It was stocked with supplies brought by sloop from San Francisco and sold to ranchers, loggers and vaqueros riding to town to attend to legal and business matters.

They usually stayed at a hotel on D Street owned by two Naragansett Indians from Connecticut named Fagan and Bennett or at Thomas Duncan's nearby boarding house.

On Sundays, the town came to life, according to the memories of pioneer W. R. Sherman, with many "getting gloriously drunk and racing their horses up and down, picking up hats, handkerchiefs . . . lying in the street . . . never mind how unsteady they were on their legs, astride their horses they were at home . . ."

Board at "homelike beaneries was $9 a week with the use of a horse," he continued. Popular foods were the tortillas, frijoles, chiles, hot tamales and jerked beef.

Large cinnamon bears still roamed the surrounding hills and, according to the Feb. 20, 1902, Marin County Journal, "one could travel for hours through the woods or over the dusty roads, and scarcely ever meet a human being. Occasionally a Mexican vaquero would pass, or a dirt-begrimed ox-teamster punching and shouting at his eight or 10-yoke team . . . the roads were so narrow it was difficult for vehicles to pass."

Every year, hundreds of strangers poured into town on Oct. 24 to celebrate the feast of St. Raphael.

"All hell broke loose" as men scampered through the streets, filling the hotels and boarding houses, stopping to play faro, monte, chuck-a-luck, red and white, rondo and twenty-one.

Saloon doors never closed and band music blared until dawn. And during the day, horse races were run down Fourth Street while some wagered on cock fights and the daily bullfight was held near today's Albert Field.

The largest home in town was the two-story adobe hacienda built in 1844 on the northwestern corner of today's Fourth and C streets by the Irish-born, Spanish-speaking Don Timoteo Murphy.

Murphy, who came to California in 1828, later became a Mexican citizen and was sent to San Rafael in 1837 as an Indian agent and alcalde.

Seven years later, the Mexican government gave him the 21,679-acre Rancho San Pedro, Santa Margarita and Las Gallinas which extended across and beyond the 21 square miles within today's city limits.

The Mexican era was a time of carefree and elegant living never paralleled again in California history. It was a time of big ranchos extending as far as the eye could see with hospitality the rule in every home.

Bowls of silver coins were customarily left at bedsides for strangers stopping for a night's rest who might need money to eat or continue their journeys.

Ranchers, like Murphy, traveled miles by horse or cart to attend fiestas at distant ranchos with the galas usually lasting at least a week or two.

Afternoons were spent picnicking and evenings at barbecues where the Mexican dons and their ladies waltzed into the predawn hours.

Up until his death at 52 in 1853, Murphy's adobe was the social mecca for both the Spanish-speaking native Californians and the newly-arrived Americans who came west during the Mexican War and the Gold Rush.

An old mission building standing in the middle of today's Courthouse Square was the home of the brothers Jacob (Jake) and J.O.B. (Orey) Short, timber and cattle dealers, who along with their widowed mother and half-sisters had crossed the plains from the Midwest by covered wagon in 1846.

Another adobe to the east, between today's Lootens Place and Lincoln Avenue, was built in 1849 by the Irish-born James Miller, who brought his family West in 1844 in the first wagon train to climb the Sierra Nevada range into California.

Later owning a ranchland empire of thousands of acres, he built a baronial mansion, called Miller Hall, on his home ranch north of town, the site of today's Marinwood.

The town's first building boom started in 1859, when Upton M. Gordon, a Pennsylvanian who came West in 1852, put up a billiard parlor and saloon on the southeastern corner of Fourth and C streets, across the street from Murphy's old adobe.

Murphy's adobe, purchased for $1,000 by Timothy Mahon in 1853, was sold to the county five years later for $5,000 and converted into Marin's first permanent courthouse.

Described as a "wretched, cramped two-story" public building "carefully constructed to suit the times and manners of early settlers," in an account by pioneer W. R. Sherman, it was soon replaced as the center of town by Gordon's new saloon across the street.

It was here the sheriff kept his books, collected taxes and deposited the county funds.

At a railing on the dirt street out front "were always hitched a string of horses, some standing all night . . . as coal oil lamps burned dimly inside." Many of the $15 horses carried $50 saddles.

Gordon's saloon was soon bought by Jake Short who added a second story for dancing and "political and public gatherings," and the newly elected San Rafael Board of Trustees held their first meeting there after the town's incorporation in 1874.

Later the building was bought by Joseph Kappermann and was known as the Kappermann Building until it was razed a decade ago to make way for today's Reynold C. Johnson Building.

The boom of 1859 resulted in the building of a combination private school and boarding house on Fourth Street operated by Southern Baptist minister Harvey Gilbert and his daughter, Julia.

Reverend Gilbert strove "to draw all the wickedness out of erring youth and fit them for a career of usefulness," the Journal reported, adding that since there were few families then in town, "the only social events" were the school's "charades, ice cream and strawberry festivals and exhibitions."

At the same time, San Quentin's Prison Warden John Sims was using convict laborers to build the three-story Main Hotel (today's Ru Ann Apartments) on the north side of Fourth between B and C streets.

brick continually oozed from the walls, according to an eyewitness account, and the floor timbers were so poor that the ballroom on the third floor was rarely used.

Next a drug store for Dr. Alfred W. Taliaferro, a forty-niner from Virginia, was built on Fourth Street between A and B, according to Archie McAllister.

But "if you needed a prescription filled," he added, "you first had to hunt up the doctor and the chances were that he would hand you the key . . . and tell you to compound your own medicine."

The arrival of the stagecoach was the most important event of the day, reported Sherman, "with deserted Main (Fourth) Street with its five little buildings suddenly becoming congested with traffic. The abominable little sidewalk adjacent to the Marin Hotel had an evil way of terminating its existence. About every 10 feet there were steps up or steps down, crowded with dogs, children, greasers and baggage."

DON TIMOTEO MURPHY
San Rafael's first major social leader

About 1860 the first turnpike between San Rafael and a ferry connection at Point San Quentin was started with "everyone in the village pitching in to help when they could" When it was finished, the stagecoach ride was shortened from five and a half miles to three and a half.

The following year, as a carpenter was razing the main mission buildings, the first public school opened and Marin's first newspaper, the Marin County Journal was founded by a father and son, Judge Ai and Jerome Barney.

The weekly was turned out by the Barneys and an assistant who cooked, ate, slept and printed, all on the same floor of the Marin Hotel.

Up until the early 1860s "there was no taint of fashion" in the town, according to the 1902 Journal. But things began to change in 1863, when Henry Wilkins, a wealthy and prominent San Francisco attorney purchased some 20 acres and an "expansive home" east of the mission near today's Fifth Avenue and Court Street.

The next year, Wilkins became the town's first commuter after prevailing upon Charles Minturn, founder and owner of the Contra Costa Navigation Co., to initiate daily ferry service between Point San Quentin and San Francisco.

Soon other wealthy San Franciscans including attorney Sidney V. Smith Sr., elected to the first board of trustees a decade later, settled in San Rafael.

(Smith's home was located on Mission Avenue near E Street, across from where James D. Walker in 1879 built Falkirk, the mansion purchased in 1907 by lumber and steamship tycoon Robert Dollar.)

In 1863, only four or five streets were open between A and E streets, according to Henry Wilkins's son, James B. Wilkins.

Fourth Street was lined with Murphy's old adobe, the Marin Hotel, a country store, livery stable, two saloons and an abandoned hotel with about 25 other buildings nearby.

During the next three years "facilities for quick and easy (travel) between San Rafael" and San Francisco were improved, the Marin County Journal reported in 1866, with the building of a marsh road that enabled stages to reach the Point San Quentin ferry landing in 20 minutes.

Beginning that year, ferries began running to the Point twice a day and as a result, "hotels and boarding houses (were) constantly crowded to overflowing." There was also "a rush for lots" with five or six buildings . . . underway or under contract to be commenced immediately . . ."

The Journal concluded, observing "life and energy seems surely to be taking the place of the dull monotony which heretofore reigned supreme in San Rafael."

That year, the town had grown to include three stores, two hotels, two boarding houses, one restaurant, two livery stables, a public school, an academy, a newspaper, a telegraph office, three bootmakers, two blacksmiths one harness-maker, a butcher shop, a clock-maker, barber, three lawyers, a physician and about 75 to 80 houses.

The Short brothers in 1868 opened the town's first subdivision, Short's Addition, south of Fourth Street.

Commuters and local landowners the next year organized a company to build the San Rafael and San Quentin Railroad to replace the stagecoach trip to Point San Quentin.

Newcomer Adolph Mailliard, direct descendant of Joseph Bonaparte and great-grandfather of Rep. William S. Mailliard, was elected president of the line.

When the train made its first run March 21, 1870, a passenger enthused "we trip down to the depot a short distance from the hotels, wait on the platform for a few minutes for the last tap of the bell, step into an elegant car and in eight or ten minutes step off the car onto the steamer" at the Point.

Around this time, William Tell Coleman, former San Francisco Vigilante leader and wealthy clipper ship magnate, purchased pioneer district attorney Walter Skidmore's white frame mansion (today Bagley

Newcomer Adolph Mailliard, direct descendant of Joseph Bonaparte and great-grandfather of Rep. William S. Mailliard, was elected president of the line.

When the train made its first run March 21, 1870, a passenger enthused "we trip down to the depot a short distance from the hotels, wait on the platform for a few minutes for the last tap of the bell, step into an elegant car and in eight or ten minutes step off the car onto the steamer" at the Point.

Around this time, William Tell Coleman, former San Francisco Vigilante leader and wealthy clipper ship magnate, purchased pioneer district attorney Walter Skidmore's white frame mansion (today Bagley

Buying an additional 8,000 acres across town, including Oliver Irwin's farm in Magnolia Valley (today's Dominican Area), and Laurel Grove (Bret Harte and Picnic Valley) he set about transforming the town into a residential haven for San Francisco's millionaires.

Eugene Smith Died In Office

Eugene W. Smith, San Rafael's first elected city clerk, and a 50-year veteran in city government, died in office in July, 1953.

Smith, a native of "Spanish Town" on the Half Moon Bay Coast, settled in San Rafael at the turn of the century. Three years later he became city clerk, a part-time position that paid $35 a month.

At the city's first election in 1915 under its new charter, Smith was elected as a combination city clerk and assessor, positions he held until his death.

Downtown had another spurt of growth when Coleman and others backed the building in 1872-73 of the old Marin County Courthouse, destroyed by fire in 1971, at the corner of Fourth and A streets.

Real estate developer William J. Miller, son of land baron James Miller, built the Parisian House (today's Marin Hotel) and Miller Block across the street on the corner of Fourth and A streets.

In 1874, with the population up to 600, San Rafael was incorporated as Marin's first self-governing municipality.

Within the first year, the first board of trustees (counterparts of today's city council) established a volunteer fire department and provided the town with sewers, gas-burning street lights, jail, pound and a town hall that was rented from lumberman Isaac Shaver for $30 a month.

When the narrow-gauge North Pacific Coast Railroad began running between Sausalito and Tomales with a spur extending from today's San Anselmo into San Rafael in January, 1875, the tiny county seat began to grow into a busy 19th Century commercial center.

Within a few decades it was to become the main shopping center for the new towns — Corte Madera, Larkspur, Mill Valley, Ross, San Anselmo and Fairfax — that sprang to life alongside the NPC tracks.

Shortly afterwards, San Francisco industrialist and railroading tycoon Peter Donahue extended his San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad from Sonoma County to San Rafael.

City Hall Pitch Made By Paper

On April 20, 1893, the Marin Journal suggested that San Rafael build a hall to house town offices and the fire department since the city was paying $780 annual rent for a firehouse and town hall on C Street and a public library on Fourth Street.

A city hall was erected 15 years later at Fifth Avenue and Julia Street. The next year a library was erected with funds from the Andrew Carnegie Foundation at Fifth Avenue and E Street. A firehouse was erected in 1917 at the corner of Fifth Avenue and C Street.

Tiburon was founded in 1884 as a railhead when he drove his track through three tunnels south of San Rafael to a ferry connection at the San Francisco Bay.

By the late 1870s with a poulation approaching 2,276, San Rafael was leaving it frontier days behind as it evolved into a small cosmopolitan community.

"A China town on C Street had already gotten a good start despite the strong anti-Chinese sentiment," according to the memoirs of Louis J. Peter Sr.

While millionaires were building mansions and country estates in Coleman's Addition in Magnolia Valley, along Mission and Fifth avenues and in Alexander Forbes's Addition surrounding his estate on Culloden Park Road, working men were boarding at Mrs. Brice's Philadelphia House on C Street and at the Bay View Hotel on the southwest corner of Third and C streets.

Two years later, in 1878, Upton M. Gordon and Anson P. Hotaling built Gordon's Opera House, still standing on the south side of Fourth Street near D Street, where actor Edwin Booth later performed. The two-story building became the entertainment center of the 19th Century town and the locale of countless political rallies and school graduations.

Commercial Center — The Cheda Building shown as it looked before World War I, still serves today as a major business building at Fourth and A streets in central San Rafael.

Early-Day San Rafael Was County's Shopping Center

THIS WAS DOWNTOWN — At the turn of the century, ornate homes of the (from background) Dufficy, Evans, Lee and Cushing families stood along Fourth Street where the Macy and Penney stores now stand. The Evans home served as Marin's first juvenile detention center after World War I. San Rafael's growing business district engulfed the homes during the 1940s.

San Rafael: At the turn of the century a small country town of frame buildings, dirt roads and fewer than 4,000 residents, has become a city of substantial buildings, paved streets and home to more than 45,000 men, women and children.

In that not-so-long-ago, as history is reckoned, Fourth Street, the town's main thoroughfare was lined by houses, picket fences, livery stables, saloons and the small stores that marked it as the county's shopping center.

During summer months, smudge pots cast their smoky pall, repelling the dread malaria bearing anopheles mosquito.

Flat bottomed scows glided along San Rafael Creek, where children played and fished along the banks that stretched as far as D Street, following the route of today's Second Street.

Young and old alike swam and boated in the outdoor salt water baths, covered today by Lincoln Avenue and Second Street.

Wealthy visitors spent summers at the old Hotel Rafael and San Francisco businessmen maintained large homes on palatial properties around the town.

A group of the city's leading women, in 1902, organized the San Rafael Improvement Club to rid the town of the pestilent mosquito and raised money to hire Paul H. Eckelman, a pioneer in mosquito abatement. He and improvement club volunteers eventually eliminated the disease-carriers by dumping gallons of crude oil into their breeding grounds in the marshy areas surrounding the town, a method today's ecology-conscious students would not likely allow.

The women, including the club's founder Mrs. Vincent Neale, helped form the Marin County Mosquito Abatement District in 1915.

Boyd Park was given to the city in 1904 by Mr. and Mrs. John Franklin Boyd as was the family's gate house, erected in 1879 and now headquarters for the Marin County Historical Society.

The family's Mission Avenue mansion, Maple Lawn, later owned by the Boyd's daughter, the late Arctic explorer Louise A. Boyd, was sold in 1962 to the San Rafael Elks Lodge which has preserved it as a clubhouse.

The day Boyd Park was dedicated on April 29, 1905, downtown stores and saloons closed their doors as thousands of onlookers turned out for the ceremonies and a picnic lunch in the new park. Three bands, 1,200 Marin school children carrying flowers, a National Guard unit and city officials marched along Fourth Street.

The city's population was given major acceleration the next year as an aftermath of the disastrous San Francisco earthquake and fire on April 18, 1906

The temblor also destroyed Tomales, Santa Rosa, damaged Petaluma and knocked buildings from foundations in Olema and Bolinas. In San Rafael only a few chimneys fell.

Local residents immediately mobilized to care for the thousands of San Franciscans fleeing to their city.

A general relief committee collected clothing, food and money for the victims. Many were lodged in private homes. Others filled hotels and boarding houses and the overflow was put up in a tent city erected behind the Hotel Rafael on a strip of land that was named Forest Meadows after becoming part of the Dominican College campus in the late 1920s.

Many of the refugees became permanent residents helping boast San Rafael's population from 3,879 in 1900 to 6,500 by 1908.

The growth was signalled by new public buildings and additions to existing ones.

Between 1905 and 1908, a $25,523 Hall of Records was added to the old county courthouse. In 1909, San Rafael's first city hall went up at Fifth Avenue and Julia Street and a new public library was erected with funds from the Andrew Carnegie Foundation at Fifth Avenue and E Street. In 1914, a $31,380 Municipal Bath House was built over the old salt water baths and survived until the Depression.

In 1915, pioneer movie producer George Middleton brought his California Motion Picture Corp. to town. Building a rambling studio and cluster of small buildings on Center Street, between Fifth and Forbes avenues, he filmed silent movies that featured San Rafael residents and usually starred his wife, Beatriz Michelina.

Manuel T. Freitas, son and namesake of the city's early day banking and land baron, remembers driving his green Buick for $5 a day in Middleton's production "Finger of Jus-

Following the United State's entry into World War I on April 17, 1917, some 2,170 Marin men registered for the draft. Soon they were marching along Fourth Street to the Union Depot, beginning a journey that would take many to battlefields in France.

That year, the fire department moved into a new firehouse at Fifth Avenue and C streets and Mayor Sigmund K. Herzog and Elwood Rake erected Fourth Street's then largest commercial building, the Aileen Apartments at Fourth and B streets.

Anti-German sentiment was strong and Scheutzen Park, a popular gathering place for San Francisco's German colony, was renamed California Park. Hamburger was called "liberty meat."

The November, 1918 armistice brought hundreds again marching along Fourth Street to a cacophony of ringing bells, honking horns and screeching sirens.

The city's American Legion post was named in honor of Hepburn Wilkins, nephew and namesake of the city's first town clerk. His parents, rejoicing at the news of peace, were notified weeks later that their son had been killed in battle during the final days of the war.

A doughboy statue, a memorial to Marin men killed in battle, was commissioned and cast with funds from across the county. It stood in front of the old courthouse until it was moved in 1971 to the new Civic Center. To it were to be added the names of those killed in subsequent wars.

When the influenza epidemic struck the city in 1919, the Hotel Rafael served as a hospital staffed by Red Cross volunteers and Dominican Sisters from the nearby convent. It was destroyed by an arsonist in 1928.

During the 1920s Fourth Street still was lined by old homes, small stores, three banks and the towering court-

VANISHED PLEASURES — Women wearing ornate hats enjoy a rowboat outing in 1902, while other San Rafael citizens swim in the salt water baths near what is now Second Street and Lincoln Avenue. ## SAN RAFAEL RELIEF STATION

June 4th, 1906.

This station will discontinue issuing rations to refugees on Saturday, June 9th.

Those who still need relief will be furnished meals at the mess in the relief camp north of the Hotel Rafael.

By command of Major General Greely.

P. W. WEST,
Captain 11th Cavalry, in charge of station.

MERCY MEMENTO — A proclamation by an Army officer recalls how San Rafael sheltered more than a thousand San Franciscans who fled the 1906 earthquake and fire. Many were housed in private homes and hotels; others stayed in a tent city in what is now Forest Meadows at Dominican College. A large portion became permanent Marin residents.

THE VIEW HAS CHANGED — This 1906 view from the top of Pine Hill in San Rafael shows Sun Valley (left) and rolling hills where now stand hundreds of homes.

A row of car agencies, service stations and auto repair shops appeared in the vicinity of Fourth Street and Lincoln Avenue.

According to Frederick (Fred) Q. Codoni, who worked at his father's Chevrolet agency in 1924 at the age of 16, the town then "was a nice friendly little place."

"We didn't make a lot of money then," he said, remembering that his father, the late Joseph Codoni, sold about 100 cars a year. A Chevrolet then sold for $600, he said.

In 1929 the city, along with the rest of the nation, began to feel the effects of the depression that followed the catastrophic stock market crash.

Manuel Freitas recalls that the Bank of San Rafael, where he worked in the 1920s, kept local dairy ranches in operation by not collecting interest on loans or foreclosing mortgages.

The San Rafael Lions Club opened a soup kitchen on Francisco Boulevard to feed the hungry and homeless derelicts who walked or rode the rails through town.

Many credit the building of Hamilton Field and the Golden Gate Bridge with rescuing the city from financial disaster. The airfield brought an Army payroll to the area and the opening of the bridge in 1937 brought an influx of commuter-residents and summer visitors.

But it was World War II that initiated the growth that transformed the small town.

Workers arriving to build liberty ships at Sausalito's Marinship needed homes. Using Federal Housing Authority (FHA) funds, builders and contractors began turning dairy ranches in Bret Harte and Sun Valley into housing tracts for Marinship and Hamilton Field personnel.

Between 1940 and 1950, city population grew from 8,573 to 13,848. Many of the wartime residents stayed on to become the vanguard of the postwar population boom.

Rafael Gardens subdivision was built on the grounds of the burnt-out Hotel Rafael at Grand and Belle avenues. Fairhills, a hillside development of expensive homes, went up on Arthur W. Foster's 135-acre Fairhills estate.

Francisco Boulevard completed its transformation from a country road into a commercial street lined by businesses and industries.

In 1949, at the urging of the Marin County Historical Society, the Hearst Foundation donated funds to build a replica Mission San Rafael Archangel chapel on St. Raphael's Catholic Church property at Fifth Avenue and A Street.

In the 1950s the city limits began expanding to the north and east as large dairy ranches were sold for development.

Terra Linda, a 400-acre subdivision that was annexed to the city in January of 1973, was sold for development two decades ago by the surviving children of Manuel T. Freitas.

Northgate Industrial Park, Northgate Shopping Center and Quail Hill were built on other portions of the 1200-acre Freitas home ranch.

Loch Lomond was developed on the Allensby Ranch and in the mid 1950s the descendents of pioneer industrialist John A. McNear sold Glenwood and

GASOLINE SAVINGS AND MORE MILEAGE IS HAT RACING ENTERPRISES PRIME INTEREST

HAT Enterprises has been building the finest racing performance engines for the past 18 years. The personnel here have applied the knowledge they have gained in 18 years of racing experience to the nations demand of fuel economy of any American made 8-6-4 cylinder engines.

Lorry Azevedo, owner of Hat Enterprises and National Racing Champion in 1972 and State Champion in 1973, is constantly building the American engines to get better gas mileage and to make your car the best running piece of machinery on the road today. He uses the most modern machine shop methods at Hat Racing, and specializes in modern tune-ups.

Dahnken of San Rafael opened its doors in July of 1959 in a small store at Third & B Street. Mr. and Mrs. Dick Cox moved to San Rafael from Salt Lake City, Utah with one of the first franchises from Mr. F.C. Dahnken of Salt Lake City. Dahnken is part of a Western United States merchandising group that now has over 50 member stores. Mr. Dahnken was one of the first merchants, back in 1933, to use a combination of a discount merchandise catalog with a personal service showroom. This concept, unusual at the time, has in recent years grown into a major factory in American merchandising.

The showroom in San Rafael has shared in this growth. In 1962 a branch store was opened in Santa Rosa and in 1963 the San Rafael store moved to a new building, designed for their use, at the corner of Second & C Sts. In 1972 the Santa Rosa branch managed by Don Enger moved into its own large new building at the corner of Fifth & E Sts. In 1973, property next to the San Rafael building was purchased, primarily for additional parking, but also to provide for a storage addition now under construction. The San Rafael and Santa Rosa Dahnken firms are now managed by David Cox, son of the owners. A new firm to be known as Cox Import Company will also open in this new building addition. This will be a partnership of Dick W. Cox of Novato and another son, Richard H. Cox of Santa Rosa. This new firm will handle the direct import and storage of giftwares which will be sold through the Dahnken franchise stores.

Through the years a number of Dahnken employees in San Rafael have qualified for their own franchise from Mr. Dahnken. The owners of franchise stores in Napa, Santa Barbara, Venture, Oxnard, Fresno, Las Vegas and Reno have had their beginning and training in San Rafael. In August of this year, Mr. Boyd McClellan will leave his position here to open his own franchise store in Bakersfield.

CITY HALL

For more than half of San Rafael's first 100 years, official business was transacted in the city hall built in 1909 at Fifth Avenue and A Street, shown as it looked in 1961 (above) and while it was being demolished three years ago (below).

TWO DECADES AGO — The first homes went up on the old Freitas Ranch in 1954, becoming the germ of Terra Linda. The knoll at lower right now holds a high-rise office building and a large motel; the fields at left have become the Northgate shopping center.

Peacock Gap for development.

Portions of the San Rafael Canal were filled in the late 1950s for development of the Montecito Shopping Center. Today the canal's banks are lined with yacht harbors, apartment houses and expensive homes.

In 1957, buildings on Fourth Streets between D and E streets were leveled in a $2 million fire that had been started by youngsters playing with matches.

Within a year new buildings were under construction along the street.

In 1962, as city population passed the 20,000 mark, county government moved from the old courthouse on Fourth Street to Frank Lloyd Wright's $4.7 million administration building at the Civic Center, north of downtown.

Four years later, San Rafael city government moved into a new million-dollar city hall on Fifth Avenue.

In 1967 the old courthouse was vacated after its courts and jail were transferred to the $11.8 million Hall of Justice at the Civic Center. The historic building, erected in 1871, three years before San Rafael's incorporation, was destroyed on May 25, 1971, in a fire set by two teen-agers.

The city's tallest structure to date, an eight-story office building, is now under construction on the old courthouse site.

As San Rafael steps into its second century, its growth is expected to continue. By 1990 its population is expected to reach 80,700. By that time Lucas Valley and Marinwood may be within the city's northern boundary.

Enjoy a $1,000,000 addition to your home for only $1,000!

CITY CHANGES FROM PASTORAL BEGINNING

The Irish Were Dominant In San Rafael Of 1880

By BRYCE W. ANDERSON

San Rafael was an Irishmen's town in the years immediately after its incorporation a century ago.

The same was true of most of Marin, as disclosed by an 1880 "Great Register," the list of voters in the country. The document was obtained at the state capitol in Sacramento by Eric McGuire of Mill Valley and presented to the San Rafael Centennial Committee.

Of 1,621 registered voters on the list, 768 were born outside the United States. And of those, 273 came from the "ould sod."

Compared with that, only 102 native Californians were listed among registered voters in Marin.

In San Rafael, where 619 of the 1,621 voters lived, there were 128 born in Ireland, compared to 45 born in California.

The voters, it must be remembered, were all men. The only place in the United States where women could vote in 1880 was in the Territory of Wyoming, although Victoria Claflin Woodhull had run for president as candidate of the People's party in 1872 (Susan B. Anthony was arrested and fined for trying to vote for her). Since many of the Irishmen, Germans, Yankees, southerners and others in Marin had taken daughters of Californios in marriage, the percentage of native-born on the register might have been greater if women had had the vote.

For purposes of registration, only 12 areas of residence in the county were recognized. Besides San Rafael, they were Bolinas, Nicasio, Novato, Olema, Point Reyes, Reed Ranch (which embraced the Tiburon Peninsula), Richardson (above Sausalito, including what is now Marin City), San Antonio (in far north Marin), San Quentin, Saucelito (the spelling had not yet been corrupted to Sausalito), and Tomales.

After San Rafael, Tomales was the next largest area, with 219 voters. Richardson had 152; San Quentin, 124; Nicasio, 94; Bolinas, 90; San Antonio, 82; Novato, 72; Olema, 72; Reed Ranch, 46; Point Reyes, 32,and Saucelito, 19.

The Irishmen were all over. Tomales had 52 of them, mostly farmers; San Quentin had 26, mostly guards at the state prison.

Next most numerous among the foreign-born were Germans, of whom there were 101 in the county, with 48 in San Rafael. The land of birth for many of these is shown in the "Great Register" as one of the old German states — Hamburg, Hanover, Prussia, etc. — for the "iron chancellor" Otto von Bismarck had not yet unified Germany when these men were born.

The register shows 90 born in Switzerland, most of them listed as farmers or dairymen. The Swiss had their greatest concentration in San Antonio, where 27 of the 82 voters listed Switzerland as their land of birth. They were concentrated also in Olema, where there were 15, and Nicasio, where there were 14.

There were 62 Portuguese on the register. Only five of these listed their place of birth as "Western Islands" — otherwise the Azores — but it is likely that many who put "Portugal" actually came from that mid-Atlantic outpost.

Next most numerous were the English, with 50, followed by Canadians, 45, and French, 35. The rest of the 768 foreign-born came from a wide variety of lands. There were even a Turk and a Luxembourger. And one who classifed as foreign-born listed his birthplace as the Sandwich Islands, now the 50th state but then the Kingdom of Hawaii under the elected monarch, Kalakaua.

New Yorkers outnumbered native Californians. There were 152 of them, of whom 64 lived in San Rafael.

New England contributed many settlers to early-day Marin. The register lists 75 from Maine, 65 from Massachusetts, 15 from New Hampshire, and 40 from Vermont. And there were 49 Pennsylvanians.

There was a lesser concentration of southerners — though enough to have produced some strong sectional feeling at the time of the Civil War. From the Old South, Virginia had the most, with 16, but there were 18 from the border state of Kentucky.

The 1880 "Great Register" shows a Marin County far different from today. "Farmer" is the most commonly listed occupation. Frequent listings of "mariner," "seaman," "ship carpenter," etc., show the water orientation of the county more than a half-century before the Golden Gate Bridge was built. Among the occupations listed were many that now exist only in memory, at least in Marin: railsplitter, hackman, carriage maker, wood chopper, hunter, vaquero, harness maker.

And in that long-ago day when the term carried honor rather than opprobrium, Henry Boyle of San Rafael and Alvin Strong Higgins of Nicasio listed themselves as capitalists.

Fourth Street's Condition In 1893

San Rafael's west end of Fourth Street "is in deplorable condition of ruts and holes and driving at a pace faster than a walk means to be in danger of broken springs," reported the Marin Journal on April 20, 1893.

"This street ought to be macadamized at once before the driving season commences," the newspaper concluded.

Bird Collector

In 1886 the Bellevue House was located at the corner of Fourth and B streets. Its proprietor, M. O'Connor, collected birds from the Orient, Europe and his native Ireland for the Bellevue's aviary.

Secretary Once Aide To Ziegler

Nancy Lieber, secretary for San Rafael City Mgr. William J. Bielser, once worked for White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler.

She was presidential press advance clerk from 1971 to 1973.

Mrs. Lieber lives in Tiburon.

Mansion Built For Only $7,800

Meadowlands, the summer mansion of Michael de Young, founding publisher of the San Francisco Chronicle, was built for $7,800 by contractor Peter Creighton in the spring and summer of 1888.

The estate, at Palm and Acacia avenues, was sold to Dominican College in 1918. The rambling brown shingle home became the college's first residence hall.

Coleman Woke A Sleeping Village

By DOROTHY GARDINER

The destiny of 19th century San Rafael was changed by William Tell Coleman, a Kentuckian who had struck it rich selling sundries to California's 49ers and later won fame as leader of the San Francisco Vigilantes.

In the late 1860s, as the first transcontinental railroad was inching across the American wilderness, Coleman invested heavily in San Rafael real estate.

The shrewd businessman, who owned a fleet of clipper ships on the New York to San Francisco run, was gambling that the town might become a western railroad embarcadero.

For the next two decades, Coleman continued using his "Eastern know-how" to transform the San Rafael frontier into suburban haven for the wealthy.

After purchasing a summer home on Mission Avenue (today's Bagley Apartments north of St. Raphael's Church property) he went to work gently shaking the dozing village to life.

In 1871 Coleman backed the short-lived Mechanics Institute, the town's first library.

The same year he paid Oliver Irwin $84,000 for more than a thousand acres in Magnolia Valley and began transforming the barren farmland into a wooded wonderland.

A nursery planted on 12 acres supplied tens of thousands shade trees for the village's hills and dales.

An engineer from San Francisco's Golden Gate Park was brought across the Bay to lay out lots and streets in Coleman's tract in Magnolia Valley, (today's Dominican area.)

In 1872 he pushed for construction of the Marin County Courthouse and helped found the village's first waterworks — the Marin County Water Co.

And, if that weren't enough, he urged incorporation of San Rafael and was one of those responsible for the birth of the city and the election of a board of trustees (forerunners of today's city council).

Coleman was always on the move. He was one of the builders of the first road to Mount Tamalpais, planted shade trees all around the town and persuaded Peter Donahue to bring his Sonoma County-based San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad to San Rafael.

A picnic area he opened at Laurel Grove (today's Bret Harte) brought thousands thronging into San Rafael every spring and summer. The area also became one of the local townspeople's favorite gathering spots and the site of the San Rafael Hose Co's early Fourth of July picnics.

And he later became a founding director of the Hotel Rafael, a mammoth luxury hotel that turned San Rafael into a leading Western resort.

Coleman also encouraged the Dominican Sisters to come to Magnolia Valley, where they built a convent at Grand and Locust avenues, opened a girl's school and later founded a four-year college and graduate school.

By 1887 Coleman's investments in borax deposits in Southern California's Death Valley were adding a million dollars a year to his fortune. But a government decision to remove the borax tariff brought Coleman's financial empire tumbling down in 1888.

With more than $2 million invested, Coleman was a ruined man.

The success story was reversed. So Coleman sold his San Rafael home to Louis Parrott for $25,000 (half its value at that time) and moved from his San Francisco Nob Hill mansion to a modest home on Fillmore Street.

But Coleman was not a man to give up simply because fortune had turned on him. Somehow, he was able to pay off all the claims against his estate before his death in 1893 at the age of 69.

SUMMER HOME — The purchase of this summer home on Mission Avenue was the first of many investments in San Rafael and Marin County made by William Tell Coleman which turned the town from a sleepy little village to a bustling turn-of-the-century city. The old house still stands (north of St. Raphael's Church property on Mission Avenue).

AN ERA DISAPPEARS — Marin's classical, Corinthian-style courthouse (right), last surviving major public building of the Greek revival style of architecture in California, was heavily damaged on May 25, 1971, in a spectacular fire. Eight months later two youths were charged with setting the blaze, which sent smoke and flames shooting into the night and was visible from as far away as Sausalito.

Fires Played Sinister, Changing Roles In City's History

By DOROTHY GARDINER

During the last century fire has played a sinister role in San Rafael; at times it even has changed the course of the city's history.

Blazes have consumed and destroyed famous 19th Century buildings, caused millions of dollars worth of damage and taken a high toll in human life.

Three of the most disastrous fires — a railroad tunnel blaze that killed a young fireman, another that destroyed a mammoth luxury hotel and one which left the old Marin County Courthouse a charred ruin — were deliberately set.

And two boys playing with matches accidentally touched off a multi-million dollar holocaust that leveled two sides of a city block and for a time threatened the entire downtown district.

Eight persons burned to death when a 70-year-old rooming house mysteriously burst into flames in 1955 and a San Rafael store-owner died of a heart attack 14 years ago when he learned his business had been destroyed in a $500,000 blaze.

And it may have been a cigarette that caused a fire in an auto repair shop 24 years ago that killed two San Rafael firemen, the first to lose their lives fighting on a city fire-line.

It was Sunday, May 21, 1950. Thousands of spectators were pouring into the city for the annual St. Raphael's Mission parade when the fire alarm sounded at 11:53 a.m.

Four San Rafael fire trucks and seven from the county rushed to the burning Mar Vista Motors at 812 Fourth Street.

Firemen Aubrey W. (Jack) Miller, 34, and William (Sonny) Bottini Jr., 24, were trapped behind a searing wall of flame when the roof of the single story building collapsed.

Firemen rushed into the "raging inferno" to drag the victims to safety, the Independent-Journal reported the next day. Miller, the father of four, trapped by a falling beam, apparently died instantly. Bottini, still alive, but critically injured, died early the next morning at a local hospital.

He had been pulled from the building by a young volunteer who today is Batallion Chief Robert Franzel of the San Rafael Fire Department.

FINALE — A wrecker's ball and chain completes the destruction of Marin's 98-year-old courthouse.

Investigators determined that the fire had erupted in a can of paint thinner close to where two workmen admitted smoking a short time before.

Another fireman was killed and San Rafael railroad service halted for six years as a result of the July 20, 1961 cave-in of a burning Northwestern Pacific Railroad tunnel beneath the northern end of Lincoln Avenue.

Later two Santa Venetia youths, aged 12 and 13, admitted setting the Puerto Suello Tunnel afire with torches made from rags and papers tied to sticks. They were assigned to a custodial institution for psychotherapy by a Marin County Superior Court judge.

Alto fireman Frank Kinsler, 23, was crushed to death when his truck fell into a 100-foot long crevice as the roof of the burning tunnel gave way.

A few weeks later Northwestern Pacific applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to abandon its line through San Rafael.

Five years of court battles ensued between the City of San Rafael and Marin County and Northwestern Pacific's parent company, Southern Pacific Railroad, before the Public Utilities Commission ordered the tunnel reopened.

The railroad had spent more than $2 million restoring the tunnel and the city and county had paid out $52,633 in legal fees and expenses before freight trains once again begin to roll under Lincoln Avenue and into downtown San Rafael on Sept. 27, 1967.

Two of the city's famous 19th Century buildings — Hotel Rafael and the Marin County Courthouse — were destroyed in spectacular fires started by arsonists.

The 200-room hotel, built in the 1880s at a cost of $700,000 on 22 acres between today's Forest Meadows and Belle Avenue, was one of the Pacific Coast's famous resorts before its destruction on July 29, 1928.

A 22-uear old Oakland man, Willie Fisher, told investigators that shortly after noon he climbed to the hotel's top floor, sprinkled a can of kerosene and ignited a blaze that soon routed 150 guests.

Firemen and neighboring property owners sprayed garden hoses on flying embers which endangered homes as far away as Lincoln Avenue.

Within two hours the fire had leveled the building and ended San Rafael's era as a resort center.

Two 16-year-old youths were arrested in connection with the 1971 burning of the vacant Marin County Courthouse, the last surviving major public building of the Greek revival style in California.

At 6 p.m. on May 25 flames were spotted in the three-story classical Corinthian structure, which for 98 years has been one of the city's best known landmarks.

Within 30 minutes the blaze was raging through the frame building.

For three hours 40 firemen fought to bring the fire under control as more than 2,000 spectators crowded around to watch flames fanned by gusts of wind shoot 50 feet into the night air. The dense smoke was seen from as far away as Sausalito.

For almost a century the courthouse, situated on a city block bounded by Fourth, A and Court streets and Fifth Avenue, had been the focal point of Marin life.

Authorities said the fire had started in the old sheriff's office in the basement facing A Street. Flames quickly shot up an elevator shaft — once the executimer's hanging scaffold — bursting out through the eaves at the attic level.

Back in 1897, our moving company began with an old horse drawn wagon. As the years passed on and the gasoline engine was becoming a more useful mode of transportation, we were the first in MARIN to purchase a new motor truck (1912 BUICK).

With the ever increasing growth in Marin's population, there was a need to expand our facilities. We purchased a new 1929 REO enclosed truck. This was the first enclosed truck to be used in Marin. Also, we acquired a sprinklered warehouse to safely store valuable items of our customers.

Today in our Fourth Generation of Family ownership, we are associated with one of the largest world wide moving companies. Since 1947 Crockett's has offered MAYFLOWER services tailored to meet the needs of anyone anywhere in the free world.

AN ERA DISAPPEARS — Marin's classical, Corinthian-style courthouse (right), last surviving major public building of the Greek revival style of architecture in California, was heavily damaged on May 25, 1971, in a spectacular fire. Eight months later two youths were charged with setting the blaze, which sent smoke and flames shooting into the night and was visible from as far away as Sausalito.

Fires Played Sinister, Changing Roles In City's History

By DOROTHY GARDINER

FINALE — A wrecker's ball and chain completes the destruction of Marin's 98-year-old courthouse.

During the last century fire has played a sinister role in San Rafael; at times it even has changed the course of the city's history.

Blazes have consumed and destroyed famous 19th Century buildings, caused millions of dollars worth of damage and taken a high toll in human life.

Three of the most disastrous fires — a railroad tunnel blaze that killed a young fireman, another that destroyed a mammoth luxury hotel and one which left the old Marin County Courthouse a charred ruin — were deliberately set.

And two boys playing with matches accidentally touched off a multi-million dollar holocaust that leveled two sides of a city block and for a time threatened the entire downtown district.

Eight persons burned to death when a 70-year-old rooming house mysteriously burst into flames in 1955 and a San Rafael store-owner died of a heart attack 14 years ago when he learned his business had been destroyed in a $500,000 blaze.

And it may have been a cigarette that caused a fire in an auto repair shop 24 years ago that killed two San Rafael firemen, the first to lose their lives fighting on a city fire-line.

It was Sunday, May 21, 1950. Thousands of spectators were pouring into the city for the annual St. Raphael's Mission parade when the fire alarm sounded at 11:53 a.m.

Four San Rafael fire trucks and seven from the county rushed to the burning Mar Vista Motors at 812 Fourth Street.

Firemen Aubrey W. (Jack) Miller, 34, and William (Sonny) Bottini Jr., 24, were trapped behind a searing wall of flame when the roof of the single story building collapsed.

Firemen rushed into the "raging inferno" to drag the victims to safety, the Independent-Journal reported the next day. Miller, the father of four, trapped by a falling beam, apparently died instantly. Bottini, still alive, but critically injured, died early the next morning at a local hospital.

He had been pulled from the building by a young volunteer who today is Batallion Chief Robert Franzel of the San Rafael Fire Department.

Investigators determined that the fire had erupted in a can of paint thinner close tọ where two workmen admitted smoking a short time before.

Another fireman was killed and San Rafael railroad service halted for six years as a result of the July 20, 1961 cave-in of a burning Northwestern Pacific Railroad tunnel beneath the northern end of Lincoln Avenue.

Later two Santa Venetia youths, aged 12 and 13, admitted setting the Puerto Suello Tunnel afire with torches made from rags and papers tied to sticks. They were assigned to a custodial institution for psychotherapy by a Marin County Superior Court judge.

Alto fireman Frank Kinsler, 23, was crushed to death when his truck fell into a 100-foot long crevice as the roof of the burning tunnel gave way.

A few weeks later Northwestern Pacific applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to abandon its line through San Rafael.

Five years of court battles ensued between the City of San Rafael and Marin County and Northwestern Pacific's parent company, Southern Pacific Railroad, before the Public Utilities Commission ordered the tunnel reopened.

The railroad had spent more than $2 million restoring the tunnel and the city and county had paid out $52,633 in legal fees and expenses before freight trains once again begin to roll under Lincoln Avenue and into downtown San Rafael on Sept. 27, 1967.

Two of the city's famous 19th Century buildings — Hotel Rafael and the Marin County Courthouse — were destroyed in spectacular fires started by arsonists.

The 200-room hotel, built in the 1880s at a cost of $700,000 on 22 acres between today's Forest Meadows and Belle Avenue, was one of the Pacific Coast's famous resorts before its destruction on July 29, 1928.

A 22-uear old Oakland man, Willie Fisher, told investigators that shortly after noon he climbed to the hotel's top floor, sprinkled a can of kerosene and ignited a blaze that soon routed 150 guests.

Firemen and neighboring property owners sprayed garden hoses on flying embers which endangered homes as far away as Lincoln Avenue.

Within two hours the fire had leveled the building and ended San Rafael's era as a resort center.

Two 16-year-old youths were arrested in connection with the 1971 burning of the vacant Marin County Courthouse, the last surviving major public building of the Greek revival style in California.

At 6 p.m. on May 25 flames were spotted in the three-story classical Corinthian structure, which for 98 years has been one of the city's best known landmarks.

Within 30 minutes the blaze was raging through the frame building.

For three hours 40 firemen fought to bring the fire under control as more than 2,000 spectators crowded around to watch flames fanned by gusts of wind shoot 50 feet into the night air. The dense smoke was seen from as far away as Sausalito.

DEADLY INFERNO — Flames rip through The Lodge, a mansion-turned-rooming house, at San Rafael Avenue and Grove Street. Eight persons died in the city's most tragic fire which occurred in March of 1955.

RUINOUS FIRE — An aerial photograph taken in the early morning hours of July 30, 1957, graphically shows the charred remains of a block of downtown San Rafael. cious material and theorized that a flammable liquid may have been poured on the floor and ignited.

Eight months later, on Jan. 17, 1972, the Independent-Journal reported that two youths had been charged in Marin Juvenile Court with setting the fire. They also had been linked to a minor fire at the building 20 days before.

After the building was vacated in 1969 and the jail, courts and sheriff's department moved to the new Hall of Justice, a movement was started to have the old courthouse declared an official landmark.

But that dream ended two years later when its charred ruins were razed.

The city's most expensive fire, a $2 million disaster, broke out on the 29th anniversary of the burning of the Hotel Rafael.

Shortly after 7 p.m., on July 29, 1957, flames engulfed buildings on Fourth Street between D and E streets. Firemen from Oakland, San Francisco and throughout Marin battled the wind-swept flames for more than two hours before finally bringing them under control at 9:30 p.m.

Two sides of Fourth Street had been destroyed; 17 businesses and one home were gone. Four firemen had been injured.

Authorities said the fire had been started by two 9-year-old boys playing with matches in a shed behind a furniture store.

That store, once a Methodist Church, and the Odd Fellows Building, erected in 1871 on the northwest corner of Fourth and D, were two historic buildings lost.

Three years later John S. O'Neill, 44-year-old president of O'Neill and Logan Hardware Co., on a fishing trip in Oregon suffered a heart attack and died after learning that his business had been one of eight destroyed in the J. B. Rice building fire.

Fire was discovered in the block-long two-story structure at 430 Francisco Boulevard at 5:40 p.m. Aug. 26, 1960.

In less than an hour the fast moving flames leveled the $100,000 Rice building and destroyed at least $400,000 in goods and equipment belonging to O'Neill and seven other tenants.

A 27-year-old retail credit company employee injured an ankle jumping from a second story window just ahead of the blaze.

Six firemen — including four thrown to the ground by a heat explosion — were injured; two cars and a truck parked nearby were destroyed.

Flying sparks which ignited lumber stored at a yard at 120 Front Street caused another $3,000 damage. And, for a time, firemen feared two huge gasoline tanks about 100 yards from the burning building might explode.

The cause of the fire was never determined.

The most tragic of the city's fires broke out on a rainy March 9, 1955.

A boarder returning at 1 a.m. to The Lodge, a mansion-turned-rooming house at San Rafael Avenue and Grove Street discovered the building ablaze.

Twenty-one firemen and 19 policemen rushed to the scene to find terrified roomers, dressed in pajamas and nightgowns, jumping from the flame-filled windows.

Heavy rain stopped the fire from spreading but not before eight roomers had burned to death — their bodies charred beyond recognition. Eight others were injured.

Authorities suspected arson but never found sufficient evidence for an arrest.

Historic Hotel Turned San Rafael Into Resort Area

Completion of the Hotel Rafael in the 1880s transformed San Rafael into a well-known resort.

During the hotel's heyday in the late 1800s thousands came to spend summers at the mammoth Victorian gingerbread structure.

The Rafael's history was as colorful as its clientele. At its zenith, the hotel was plunged into debt by a scandal. The 1906 earthquake rocked its sleeping guests out of their beds, driving them into the streets in their nightclothes. At one time, the hotel's elegant rooms had to be converted into an infirmary.

Advertised as 50 minutes from San Francisco by ferry and train, the Rafael was the brainchild of railroad owner James M. Donahue.

Young Donahue had inherited his father, Peter Donahue's San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad which ran trains between Marin and Sonoma counties and ferries from San Francisco to Tiburon.

He is supposed to have come up with the idea for a luxurious hotel during a street corner conversation with William Tell Coleman, newspaperman James H. Wilkins and mining engineer Robert Watt, all men interested in the town's development and growth.

The proposed site was Watt's 22-acre estate in developer Coleman's tract in Magnolia Valley.

The hotel backers called a public meeting and raised $175,000 to start the San Rafael Hotel Co. at the session, which also triggered a short-lived boom in San Rafael land speculation.

Watt's estate, bounded by today's Highway 101 (then a meadow), Belle, Grand and Watt avenues, was purchased for $35,000 cash and $10,000 in hotel stock.

The company's roster of directors was a "Who's Who" of the day:

Donahue, who lived in a palatial mansion on today's Lincoln Avenue; Coleman, a millionaire whose mansion still stands on Mission Avenue; Arthur W. Foster, a financier whose estate, Fairhills, is now the site of the development of the same name, and William Babcock, San Francisco tycoon (tugboats and banks) who owned Edgehill, a 50-acre showplace preserved today as part of the Dominican College campus.

James Donahue's brother-in-law, Baron John Henry von Schroeder, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian War, became company vice-president.

The Baron and his wife, the former Mary Ellen Donahue, became major stockholders in the hotel company. (They also inherited Donahue's San Rafael home after the young tycoon's death in 1890.)

A team of San Francisco architects designed a three-story structure. Work was underway in 1887 and on June 4, 1888 the hotel was opened to the public.

With families from near and far coming to enjoy the hotel's large and airy rooms, the parent company was able to pay off a $40,000 mortgage in the first year.

Lush gardens lined by hothouses and a circular maze were laid out by the same landscape designer who did the famous Del Monte Hotel in Monterey.

Early day tennis greats and throngs of enthusiastic spectators gathered at the hotel's tennis courts at the southern end of the property where the Pacific States Lawn Tennis Association held tournaments.

One of the famous matches was between "Miss Mary Sutton, tennis champion of the world," who was to meet "Hazel Hotchkiss, women's state champion" at the hotel at 3 p.m., July 4, 1908, according to the Marin Journal of June 25.

Following young Donahue's death Baron von Schroeder decided that "the hotel was such a smashing success, it would be great to own a half interest," according to the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian.

So the Baron purchased the shares owned by Coleman and several other stockholders, enlarged the hotel and built an observation tower on the grounds.

He was a gracious host, Mrs. Donnelly wrote, "wining and dining celebrities."

But his proclivity for parties eventually got him into trouble, according to both Mrs. Donnel-

name, and William Babcock, San Francisco tycoon (tugboats and banks) who owned Edgehill, a 50-acre showplace preserved today as part of the Dominican College campus.

James Donahue's brother-in-law, Baron John Henry von Schroeder, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian War, became company vice-president.

The Baron and his wife, the former Mary Ellen Donahue, became major stockholders in the hotel company. (They also inherited Donahue's San Rafael home after the young tycoon's death in 1890.)

A team of San Francisco architects designed a three-story structure. Work was underway in 1887 and on June 4, 1888 the hotel was opened to the public.

With families from near and far coming to enjoy the hotel's large and airy rooms, the parent company was able to pay off a $40,000 mortgage in the first year.

Lush gardens lined by hothouses and a circular maze were laid out by the same landscape designer who did the famous Del Monte Hotel in Monterey.

Early day tennis greats and throngs of enthusiastic spectators gathered at the hotel's tennis courts at the southern end of the property where the Pacific States Lawn Tennis Association held tournaments.

One of the famous matches was between "Miss Mary Sutton, tennis champion of the world," who was to meet "Hazel Hotchkiss, women's state champion" at the hotel at 3 p.m., July 4, 1908, according to the Marin Journal of June 25.

Following young Donahue's death Baron von Schroeder decided that "the hotel was such a smashing success, it would be great to own a half interest," according to the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian.

So the Baron purchased the shares owned by Coleman and several other stockholders, enlarged the hotel and built an observation tower on the grounds.

He was a gracious host, Mrs. Donnelly wrote, "wining and dining celebrities."

But his proclivity for parties eventually got him into trouble, according to both Mrs. Donnel-

EARLY SPLENDOR — Verdant gardens, tennis courts, an observation tower and even a maze, were only part of the luxury offered by the Hotel Rafael during the height of its glory. The company's roster of directors was a veritable "Who's Who" of the day.

END OF AN ERA — Some 40 years of history went up in smoke in only two hours when a 22-year-old arsonist set the torch to the Hotel Rafael in 1928. The fire was set shortly after noon while residents of the resort hotel were having their lunch and leveled the structure in less than two hours.

ly and the San Francisco Chronicle's columnist, Millie Robbins.

At the turn of the century a San Francisco newspaper, the Morning Call, called von Schroeder down in its columns for "shocking and scandalous conduct," Mrs. Robbins reported in a Jan. 4, 1966 story. So the Baron sued the Call for libel, asking $250,000 damages.

At the trial "a parade of witnesses" testified that the Baron and his friends "by reason of intoxication had thrown large amounts of dishes, glasses and bottles on the floor and out the windows . . . and had gambled . . . at a game of cards called poker."

As for the Baron, Mrs. Robbins wrote: "It was charged that he stared at and ogled women in and around the hotel and at the Tiburon ferryboat slip."

Another witness insisted that "he had come upon the Baron making love to a lady in the maze," she continued.

The outcome: "True or false, the jury at least was convinced that von Schroeder was everything he had been called, and brought a verdict against him," Mrs. Robbins concluded.

But von Schroeder would not admit defeat. He appealed to the state supreme court which granted a second trial. Five years later on Feb. 15, 1908, the Marin Journal reported that the Baron had finally triumphed in his libel suit against the San Francisco newspaper.

HOTEL OWNER — Baron John Henry von Schroeder was so impressed by the Hotel Rafael he purchased a controlling interest and wined and dined lavishly there for many years.

The Baron withstood the notoriety, but the hotel, according to Mrs. Donnelly, was in debt.

In 1909 the Baron and his wife closed the Rafael. They then returned to Europe where the Baron joined the Kaiser's Army as a major in command of the Third Dragoons. As a result, the hotel buildings became "alien property" during World War I.

The Regents of the University of California foreclosed a $57,836 mortgage and took over the property in 1918.

When the influenza epidemic struck the city the next year, a Swiss-born physician, J. H. Kuser, transformed it into a hospital.

There the victims were nursed by Red Cross volunteers and Dominican Sisters from the neighboring convent.

Prominent and wealthy women, including the late Louise A. Boyd (famed Artic explorer whose estate — Maple Lawn — is today's Elk's Club) spent their waking hours at the hotel caring for the countless victims.

Miss Boyd is remembered for sending her chauffeur speeding to "working men's rooming houses" across town to bring the sick and dying to the hotel while she remained behind, working and even carrying bedpans some others were reluctant to touch.

Following the epidemic, the hotel was leased to two Oakland hotelmen who renovated and remodeled it.

The Rafael reopened with a gala dinner dance the next year.

The new managers were disappointed when "guests no longer . . . stayed for an entire season," Mrs. Donnelly wrote.

But the local people supported the hotel during the "roaring 20s" and it was the scene of numerous parties, dinners and dances hosted and attended by Marin residents.

Organizations such as the San Rafael Chamber of Commerce, San Rafael Rotary Club and Lion's Club were founded within its walls and continued to hold luncheon and dinner meetings in its dining room.

But San Rafael's grand era as a resort city ended July 29, 1928.

Shortly after noon, the hotel (that once was advertised as safe from fire) was leveled within two hours in a blaze set by a 22-year-old arsonist.

One hundred and fifty guests were evacuated even though some at first were unwilling to leave their lunches. Two employees and a fireman were rescued from a top floor.

Two homes on Lincoln Avenue and nearby sheds and garages were set afire by flying sparks as firemen and neighbors battled to keep the entire neighborhood from going up in flames.

Eleven years after the fire — in 1939 —the hotel grounds were sold for $40,000. The next year the property was divided into 79 lots in a subdivision map filed by Willard F. Williamson.

The area later became Rafael Gardens.

All that remains today of San Rafael's resort era are the few old trees and shrubs from the Hotel Rafael gardens, scattered around homes still in the subdivision. And the hotel's stone pillars still stand at the base of Rafael Drive.

Victim Requests Rustler Release

A petition demanding the pardon of convicted cattle rustler Joseph Phillips has been signed by lumberman Isaac Shaver, from whom Phillips stole the cattle, a judge and the district attorney, the Marin Journal of Feb. 27, 1879 reported.

The petition stated that Phillips was in ill health.

Fire Department

The San Rafael City Director of 1901 reported that "the San Rafael Fire Department is fully equipped and is one of the best volunteer departments in the state. Number of hydrants, 68; water supply, first class; gravity system from Mount Tamalpais; volunteer firemen, 75; hose, 3,200 feet; hose carts, five and hook and ladders, two."

One Of Oldest

The Bagley apartment building on Mission Avenue, built in 1852 by Marin County Dist. Atty. Walter Skidmore, is one of the oldest structures in the City of San Rafael. It was later purchased by pioneer developer William Tell Coleman.

SAN QUENTIN, THEN AND NOW — Fortress-like structures at San Quentin sit shrouded under a rare mantle of snow in the 1913 photograph at left. At right, a much-expanded facility, which still retains many of its antiquated buildings beneath its more modern look, attracts a horde of visitors in September of 1970.

San Quentin Prison — A Paradox

By DOROTHY GARDINER

In post Gold Rush years, while Marin businessmen and ranchers were busy exporting beef and timber to a growing San Francisco, the county imported a controversial institution — a penal colony at San Quentin.

Twenty acres at Punta San Quentin, three miles south of the tiny settlement of San Rafael, were purchased by the state as its first prison site.

From the beginning, San Quentin Prison played a paradoxical role in the county.

Prisoners in chains and leg irons became a major work force when they were hired out to pioneers to harvest potatoes, cut timber, build roads, erect cottages and build San Rafael's first brick buildings and rock walls.

But repeated acts of violence, riots and escapes often with prison officials and local people kidnapped as hostages — brought cries throughout the years from Marin citizens, newspaper editors and officials asking the prison be moved from the county.

During the 1930s with a population nearing 6,500, the prison became the largest penal institution in the world.

Today with more than 3,300 inmates and up to 200 new arrivals monthly, it is still the largest single facility operated by the State Department of Corrections, said San Quentin information officer William D. Nyberg.

Beginning in the 1940s, under Warden Clinton T. Duffy — who as the son of a guard was born, reared and educated at San Quentin — it became one of the first facilities to adopt modern rehabilitation programs.

But regardless of reforms and past industrial contributions to the county, segments of the community have continued to urge removal of the prison.

These protests heightened following three convicts' bloody escape try from the Hall of Justice in 1970 that left Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and three others dead.

They reached a crescendo after the subsequent 1971 escape attempt in which three guards and two convicts were tortured and murdered and Soledad Brother George Jackson was gunned down.

Five months later in January, 1972, Gov. Ronald Reagan announced the prison would be closed in 1974.

Shortly after the announcement, Warden Louis S. Nelson commented that closing of the prison would have an economic impact on the county with loss of a $9 million payroll for 700 employees, most of whom reside in Marin.

Then the state for a time abandoned its plans to close San Quentin, and the prison population began to rise again. For a while the proposal was to remodel old cell blocks, and then this year the Reagan administration announced new closure plans — but the announcement was met in Marin with much skepticism.

The controversy began 122 years ago when a handful of pioneers lived in San Rafael and less than 500 persons in the county.

The state bought 20 acres from James R. Buckelew for $10,000 and one week later on July 14, 1852, (appropriately it was Bastille Day) a brig bearing 50 men and women convicts was towed across the Bay from Angel Island and moored at the point.

During the next two years as convicts constructed the first cellblock from granite quarried on the site, 150 men and women slept in their own waste below decks of the abandoned ship.

First warden was James M. Estell, member of the "Know-Nothing" Party whose San Francisco firm was selling brick and stone to the state for construction of the facility.

He received $10,000 a month and was authorized to use convicts to build the prison, lease convict laborers to the outside and later used inmates as servants in his San Francisco home.

Prisoners were guarded by ". . . scum from San Francisco's Barbary Coast," who were paid $50 a month, according to the late Independent-Journal historian Florence Donnelly in a Nov. 28, 1964 Marin Magazine article.

Most prisoners were foreign-born, she wrote, explaining that "Californians resented people whose skin was not white and who did not speak English."

(Also at the time non-whites were prohibited by law from testifying at trials where whites were involved. During the Civil War the law was modified to allow testimony from Negroes, but it was not until 1875 that Chinese and Indians were granted equal rights to give testimony.

One of the first buildings erected, Mrs. Donnelly said, was a cottage where women prisoners gave favors to their own husbands, guards and boyfriends.

According to Kenneth Lamott in his "Chronicles of San Quentin," the first cellblock, called "The Stones" was completed in 1854. By the end of the year 300 were crammed into its 48 cells, built to hold 156.

During its first decade, the prison grew to include two stone buildings, a small brick cellblock for women and two three-story structures all of which have been razed and replaced over the years.)

Warden Estell's contract was cancelled in 1854 after state investigators reported frequent escapes, drunkeness (liquor was avilable for both prisoners and guards), immorality and careless bookkeeping.

Replaced for six months by three directors later fired for spending six times money allocated for the facility, Estell returned after helping elect a "Know-Nothing" Party member governor.

Prison conditions worsened with 418 convicts huddled in the "Stones."

Escapes were frequent, with prisoners poorly fed, flogged, dressed in rags and subjected to cruel punishments.

Following another investigation, Estell assigned his contract with the state to John F. McCauley, who had sold rotting meat to feed the prisoners.

Before being ousted for inefficiency in 1861, (by this time he was a rich man, Mrs. Donnelly wrote) McCauley had sent prisoners to San Rafael to build San Rafael's first brick buildings.

According to Independent-Journal archives, the Ru Ann Apartments on the north side of Fourth Street between B and C streets were built on 1860 as the Marin Hotel by convicts using brick fired at the prison's yard.

The structure still meets earthquake safety standards, according to San Rafael Building Inspector Jack K. Coates.

Early editions of the Marin County Journal were published and sold there in the early 1860s. At the same time it was the office for the San Rafael Stage Co. and headquarters for lawyers and judges traveling to the tiny county seat to participate in trials stemming from land disputes over Mexican land grants.

But its construction undoubtedly caused a commotion 114 years ago.

The prison log on Feb. 20, 1860, states that 13 convicts were taken to San Rafael to work on a building and spend nights in the small county jail (then at the corner of Fourth and C streets.)

The following day a trusty escaped and was followed over the hill a few days later by nine more convicts.

On July 21, five prisoners, all tailors, were sent to lay carpets at the new hotel. The next day two escaped "by slipping away" and a day later one of five replacements jumped to freedom from a second-story window.

Beginning in early days, skilled convicts made furniture in the prison's factory that was sold to local residents. The factory still operates but now makes articles solely for public buildings.

A century ago, convicts also tanned hides and made shoes and harnesses. Today's inmates work in a clothing factory that manufactures garments for the inmate population.

Unskilled early-day convicts were sent to work on the prison's rock pile and brickyard. Today many are enrolled in vocational training programs that teach everything from baking to bookbinding.

At one of the first attempts at reform in 1879 the Legislature placed the facility under a five-member board of directors. At this time outside convict labor was supposedly abolished.

But according to historian Jack Mason in an article in the Point Reyes Light on March 4, 1971, in the 1890s convicts were "used to build public highways" with as many as 90 at a time working on Tiburon's West Shore Highway.

In 1880 the prison opened a jute mill which for years supplied farmers across the state with grain sacks. It was destroyed in a 1951 fire that caused $3 million damage and injured one person.

Further 19th Century reforms ended floggings and instituted a parole law in 1893.

But that year executions were transferred from the county level to the state and the first convict was hanged at San Quentin.

In all, 214 convicts have been hanged and 165 put to death in the prison's apple green gas chamber built in 1937 to replace the gallows.

When a Supreme Court ruling in 1972 abolished the death penalty, there were 107 men on death row including convicted murderers Sirhan Bishara Sirhan and Charles Manson.

After the turn of the century, Warden John E. Hoyle abolished striped uniforms and established a day school for in-

$20,000 Bid For New City Hall

The San Rafael Board of Trustees accepted a low bid of $20,728 from the Andrew Wilkey Co. of San Francisco to build a city hall at Fifth Avenue and Julia Street, reported the June 18, 1908 Marin Journal.

The city hall, opened in 1909, served as the seat of city government until 1966 when it was replaced by a million dollar structure at Fifth Avenue and D Street.

The late William S. Nock was elected mayor of San Rafael seven times. First elected in 1929, he was again elected to two-year terms in 1931, 1933, 1937, 1941, 1943 and 1945.

San Quentin Prison — A Paradox

By DOROTHY GARDINER

In post Gold Rush years, while Marin businessmen and ranchers were busy exporting beef and timber to a growing San Francisco, the county imported a controversial institution — a penal colony at San Quentin.

Twenty acres at Punta San Quentin, three miles south of the tiny settlement of San Rafael, were purchased by the state as its first prison site.

From the beginning, San Quentin Prison played a paradoxical role in the county.

Prisoners in chains and leg irons became a major work force when they were hired out to pioneers to harvest potatoes, cut timber, build roads, erect cottages and build San Rafael's first brick buildings and rock walls.

But repeated acts of violence, riots and escapes often with prison officials and local people kidnapped as hostages — brought cries throughout the years from Marin citizens, newspaper editors and officials asking the prison be moved from the county.

During the 1930s with a population nearing 6,500, the prison became the largest penal institution in the world.

Today with more than 3,300 inmates and up to 200 new arrivals monthly, it is still the largest single facility operated by the State Department of Corrections, said San Quentin information officer William D. Nyberg.

Beginning in the 1940s, under Warden Clinton T. Duffy — who as the son of a guard was born, reared and educated at San Quentin — it became one of the first facilities to adopt modern rehabilitation programs.

But regardless of reforms and past industrial contributions to the county, segments of the community have continued to urge removal of the prison.

These protests heightened following three convicts' bloody escape try from the Hall of Justice in 1970 that left Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and three others dead.

They reached a crescendo after the subsequent 1971 escape attempt in which three guards and two convicts were tortured and murdered and Soledad Brother George Jackson was gunned down.

Five months later in January, 1972, Gov. Ronald Reagan announced the prison would be closed in 1974.

Shortly after the announcement, Warden Louis S. Nelson commented that closing of the prison would have an economic impact on the county with loss of a $9 million payroll for 700 employees, most of whom reside in Marin.

Then the state for a time abandoned its plans to close San Quentin, and the prison population began to rise again. For a while the proposal was to remodel old cell blocks, and then this year the Reagan administration announced new closure plans — but the announcement was met in Marin with much skepticism.

The controversy began 122 years ago when a handful of pioneers lived in San Rafael and less than 500 persons in the county.

The state bought 20 acres from James R. Buckelew for $10,000 and one week later on July 14, 1852, (appropriately it was Bastille Day) a brig bearing 50 men and women convicts was towed across the Bay from Angel Island and moored at the point.

During the next two years as convicts constructed the first cellblock from granite quarried on the site, 150 men and women slept in their own waste below decks of the abandoned ship.

First warden was James M. Estell, member of the "Know-Nothing" Party whose San Francisco firm was selling brick and stone to the state for construction of the facility.

He received $10,000 a month and was authorized to use convicts to build the prison, lease convict laborers to the outside and later used inmates as servants in his San Francisco home.

Prisoners were guarded by ". . . scum from San Francisco's Barbary Coast," who were paid $50 a month, according to the late Independent-Journal historian Florence Donnelly in a Nov. 28, 1964 Marin Magazine article.

Most prisoners were foreign-born, she wrote, explaining that "Californians resented people whose skin was not white and who did not speak English."

(Also at the time non-whites were prohibited by law from testifying at trials where whites were involved. During the Civil War the law was modified to allow testimony from Negroes, but it was not until 1875 that Chinese and Indians were granted equal rights to give testimony.

One of the first buildings erected, Mrs. Donnelly said, was a cottage where women prisoners gave favors to their own husbands, guards and boyfriends.

According to Kenneth Lamott in his "Chronicles of San Quentin," the first cellblock, called "The Stones" was completed in 1854. By the end of the year 300 were crammed into its 48 cells, built to hold 156.

During its first decade, the prison grew to include two stone buildings, a small brick cellblock for women and two three-story structures all of which have been razed and replaced over the years.)

Warden Estell's contract was cancelled in 1854 after state investigators reported frequent escapes, drunkeness (liquor was avilable for both prisoners and guards), immorality and careless bookkeeping.

Replaced for six months by three directors later fired for spending six times money allocated for the facility, Estell returned after helping elect a "Know-Nothing" Party member governor.

Prison conditions worsened with 418 convicts huddled in the "Stones."

Escapes were frequent, with prisoners poorly fed, flogged, dressed in rags and subjected to cruel punishments.

Following another investigation, Estell assigned his contract with the state to John F. McCauley, who had sold rotting meat to feed the prisoners.

Before being ousted for inefficiency in 1861, (by this time he was a rich man, Mrs. Donnelly wrote) McCauley had sent prisoners to San Rafael to build San Rafael's first brick buildings.

According to Independent-Journal archives, the Ru Ann Apartments on the north side of Fourth Street between B and C streets were built on 1860 as the Marin Hotel by convicts using brick fired at the prison's yard.

The structure still meets earthquake safety standards, according to San Rafael Building Inspector Jack K. Coates.

Early editions of the Marin County Journal were published and sold there in the early 1860s. At the same time it was the office for the San Rafael Stage Co. and headquarters for lawyers and judges traveling to the tiny county seat to participate in trials stemming from land disputes over Mexican land grants.

But its construction undoubtedly caused a commotion 114 years ago.

The prison log on Feb. 20, 1860, states that 13 convicts were taken to San Rafael to work on a building and spend nights in the small county jail (then at the corner of Fourth and C streets.)

The following day a trusty escaped and was followed over the hill a few days later by nine more convicts.

On July 21, five prisoners, all tailors, were sent to lay carpets at the new hotel. The next day two escaped "by slipping away" and a day later one of five replacements jumped to freedom from a second-story window.

Beginning in early days, skilled convicts made furniture in the prison's factory that was sold to local residents. The factory still operates but now makes articles solely for public buildings.

A century ago, convicts also tanned hides and made shoes and harnesses. Today's inmates work in a clothing factory that manufactures garments for the inmate population.

Unskilled early-day convicts were sent to work on the prison's rock pile and brickyard. Today many are enrolled in vocational training programs that teach everything from baking to bookbinding.

At one of the first attempts at reform in 1879 the Legislature placed the facility under a five-member board of directors. At this time outside convict labor was supposedly abolished.

But according to historian Jack Mason in an article in the Point Reyes Light on March 4, 1971, in the 1890s convicts were "used to build public highways" with as many as 90 at a time working on Tiburon's West Shore Highway.

In 1880 the prison opened a jute mill which for years supplied farmers across the state with grain sacks. It was destroyed in a 1951 fire that caused $3 million damage and injured one person.

Further 19th Century reforms ended floggings and instituted a parole law in 1893.

But that year executions were transferred from the county level to the state and the first convict was hanged at San Quentin.

In all, 214 convicts have been hanged and 165 put to death in the prison's apple green gas chamber built in 1937 to replace the gallows.

When a Supreme Court ruling in 1972 abolished the death penalty, there were 107 men on death row including convicted murderers Sirhan Bishara Sirhan and Charles Manson.

After the turn of the century, Warden John E. Hoyle abolished striped uniforms and established a day school for in-

$20,000 Bid For New City Hall

The San Rafael Board of Trustees accepted a low bid of $20,728 from the Andrew Wilkey Co. of San Francisco to build a city hall at Fifth Avenue and Julia Street, reported the June 18, 1908 Marin Journal.

The city hall, opened in 1909, served as the seat of city government until 1966 when it was replaced by a million dollar structure at Fifth Avenue and D Street.

Was Mayor Often

The late William S. Nock was elected mayor of San Rafael seven times. First elected in 1929, he was again elected to two-year terms in 1931, 1933, 1937, 1941, 1943 and 1945.

mates, according to Dr. Leonard L. Stanley, longtime prison physician, in his book "Men at Their Worst."

Hoyle's successor, James A. Johnston initiated an honor system, allowing men to work without guards, started a dental program and obtained funds for construction of 800 new cells.

In 1933 women prisoners were sent to Tehachapi, and their former quarters turned into a hospital.

But regardless of reform measures enacted throughout the years, some people living on the outside continued to be alarmed at having the prison as a neighbor.

Escapes were commonplace as far back as 1862, when more than 150 convicts made a dash for freedom through prison gates, taking Lt. Gov. John F. Chellis, along as hostage.

Holding Chellis in the lead, the escapees headed for Ross Landing (today's College of Marin site). There Chellis was released after failing to make it over a high fence, and the convicts were left facing a San Rafael possee led by Sheriff Val Doub, and including wealthy landowner John Lucas and Marin County Journal publisher Jerome Barney.

Before the convicts were rounded up, four were killed and some 30 wounded, three of whom later died.

By 1895 the Marin Journal was urging abandonment of the facility, and again in 1925 there was a motion to remove the prison, when escapes became so frequent that San Rafael had 56 armed men protecting the city.

In 1934 San Rafael Mayor William S. Nock suggested moving the prison to Angel Island. A year later one of the most violent outbreaks occurred.

A group of armed inmates broke into a meeting room, pistol whipped Warden James B. Holohan and took several members of the state prison board hostage.

They were apprehended near Valley Ford in northwest Marin after a chase across back roads and a gun battle in which Marin County's young district attorney, Albert E. Bagshaw, fatally shot the convict ringleader.

Holohan, who never fully recovered, retired the next year.

Clinton Duffy became warden in 1940. During his 11-year term prisoners were allowed radios in their cells, movies twice a month, cafeteria service, track meets, psychiatric counseling and New Year parties.

His successor, in 1951, Harley O. Teets, a recognized discipIanarian told friends that every execution in the gas chamber "takes something out of me."

The next two wardens were Fred R. Dickson from 1957 to 1964 and Lawrence E. Wilson who was replaced by Nelson in 1967.

Immigrants Helped Form New City

Hard-working immigrants who arrived in San Rafael in the latter part of the 19th Century played a large part in transforming the sleepy little village into a thriving commercial center.

They came from various corners of the world: Italy, Ireland, Portugal, Russia and China.

Peasants, shopkeepers, peddlers and craftsmen all were seeking a better life in what to them was still the "New World."

Portugese dairy workers came to work on local ranches and many soon had their own spreads.

Chinese who were sent here to build the Central Pacific Railroad later established a Chinatown on C Street. There they operated laundries and grocery stores and sold lottery tickets to generations of San Rafael residents.

Italians gathered together in a settlement south of Fourth Street, took up gardening, opened restaurants and bought hotels.

Among the immigrants who took on major roles in the city's development were Jacob Albert, a Lithuanian peddler; Maximillian Herzog, a German butcher; James Ghilotti, an Italian stonemason; Neil McPhail, a Canadian liveryman, and Frank P. Grady, an Irish coachman.

Italian Stonemason Ghilotti Sought 'Fortuna'

When Italian-born stonemason, James Ghilotti, brought his young wife and infant son to San Rafael in 1913, he was seeking "la fortuna" — a good life and good future.

That future would include the birth of four more sons and a daughter, a close-knit family life centered in the city's Italian colony and founding of a small construction business that would grow into one of the Bay Area's largest engineering, grading, paving, and demolition firms.

Shortly before James Ghilotti's death at 70 in 1950, his firm was taken over by his sons, William, Mario, Dino and Henry. It was incorporated as Ghilotti Brothers in 1951.

Last year the firm's payroll alone was in excess of a million dollars, reported Gen. Mgr. Mario Ghilotti as he told of the firm's beginnings and his family's life in early San Rafael.

Before coming to Marin, his father, descendant of a long line of Northern Italian stonemasons, first worked in South Africa with his father and then in San Francisco following the 1906 earthquake.

Returning to his hometown of Grosio, he met and, in 1912, married his wife, Amalia. Five months after the first of their first son, William, in 1913, the family set out for San Rafael, where an uncle, the late Anthony Ghilotti owned Fourth Street's Lincoln Hotel.

He opened a small construction company back of his two-story home at 1815 Fourth Street, now the site of a Mayfair Market parking lot.

Ghilotti Brothers — which now operates a fleet of tractors, graders, rigs, trucks and ready-mix carriers painted red, yellow and black, ("good Italian colors," according to Ghilotti) was started with one horse-drawn wagon. James Ghilotti used the rig to fetch "good blue stone" from Sonoma County to set up walls and build walkways on San Rafael and Ross Valley estates.

Ghilotti paved many of the city's first sidewalks and streets, worked on Larkspur's Blue Rock Hotel and erected the foundation for the Doughboy memorial statue that stood for decades in front of the old courthouse before moved to the new Civic Center in 1971.

Tragedy struck the family in 1919 when 5-year-old Dante was struck and killed by a Model T Ford as he played in front of the family home.

The brothers, Willy, Mario, Dino and Babe, grew up helping their father in business, often arising as youngsters at 6 a.m. to load and unload the cement truck, Mario Ghilotti recalled.

Their west end home became "a place for everyone to meet. . .the door was never locked and often there were more friends and neighbors than family members at the dinner table," he said.

"Italian was spoken at the table," he added, "until Nancy (the youngest Ghilotti) was in kindergarten. Then we could all speak English."

Every summer the Ghilottis and several other Italian families headed for St. Helena to buy a wagonful of grapes. Returning home, the men crushed the grapes into a year's supply of wine while the women cooked polenta and fritata for dinner and the children played outside.

The brothers, who later were to install hundreds of swimming pools, as children swam in the San Rafael Canal and at McNear Beach.

Since "there was no Pop Warner football or Little League," Ghilotti said the youngsters formed their own teams, the "West End Wildcats and D Street Marsh Rats."

When the tide was out the boys played baseball and football in the grassy marshland where the Ghilottis in the mid-1950s founded Shamrock Materials, Inc. on Irwin Street.

(Babe Ghilotti ran this firm from 1955 to 1960, leaving to become a partner in Maggiora and Ghilotti, a Corte Madera grading and sewer contracting firm. Dino and Mario Ghilotti sold their Shamrock stock in 1969.)

There wasn't much to do in town, Ghilotti remembers. "We watched fighters from Billy Shannon's training camp at the west end of Fourth Street running in front of our home."

When shipping magnate Robert Dollar died in 1932, James Ghilotti took his children to the funeral at the First Presbyterian Church "to see the diplomats from all over the world."

The family firm was always a part of their lives.

Shortly before World War II, the company added tractors and heavy equipment and began bidding on major construction jobs.

In 1941 the firm moved into a building on the canal side of Francisco Boulevard where it remained until moving in 1963 to a three-acre site at 525 Jacoby Street.

During the war years the elder Ghilotti proudly displayed blue stars in his front room window to mark his four sons' service in the armed forces. William, Henry and Dino were in the Army and Mario was in the Navy.

When the boys returned they joined the company as the county began its post-war building boom.

Soon the Ghilottis were securing contracts with the state and county to widen and pave highways and roads throughout Marin and Sonoma counties.

They graded and paved streets and driveways in the city's new subdivisions — Fairhills, Rafael Gardens, Los Ranchitos and Terra Linda.

In 1960 they began doing demolition work and received contracts to raze the old San Rafael city hall and the county courthouse.

William Ghilotti was corporation president until his death at 53 in 1967. He was succeeded by his brother, Dino. Dino's son, Richard W. Ghilotti, is the firm's vice president.

In the future, Mario hopes his sons, Michael, 11, and Dante, 5, will keep the business going.

During the war years the elder Ghilotti proudly displayed blue stars in his front room window to mark his four sons' service in the armed forces. William, Henry and Dino were in the Army and Mario was in the Navy.

When the boys returned they joined the company as the county began its post-war building boom.

Soon the Ghilottis were securing contracts with the state and county to widen and pave highways and roads throughout Marin and Sonoma counties.

They graded and paved streets and driveways in the city's new subdivisions — Fairhills, Rafael Gardens, Los Ranchitos and Terra Linda.

In 1960 they began doing demolition work and received contracts to raze the old San Rafael city hall and the county courthouse.

William Ghilotti was corporation president until his death at 53 in 1967. He was succeeded by his brother, Dino. Dino's son, Richard W. Ghilotti, is the firm's vice president.

In the future, Mario hopes his sons, Michael, 11, and Dante, 5, will keep the business going.

Albert—Pioneer Merchandise Man

JACOB (JAKE) ALBERT
He had Wonder Store

By the turn of the century Jacob (Jake) Albert's Wonder Store at Fourth and B Streets already was the city's largest dry goods establishment.

In later years the Lithuanian-born Albert opened the country's largest department store, and eventually a chain of stores. He also erected the city's n first four-story office building, served as city councilman and gave San Rafael Albert Field and a boy scout hall.

The Albert estate and the Albert family still own large parcels of downtown property today.

Twenty-one year old Jake Albert, his wife, Annie, and infant son, Harry, arrived in San Francisco from Pennsylvania in 1892.

At the Ferry Building, Albert plunked down one of his few remaining dollars for a ticket that would take the family as far as a dollar would go.

Immediately after arriving in Tocaloma, west of San Rafael, He donned a peddlar's pack and began selling household items and swallow tail costs to milkers and ranchers as he walked toward the county seat.

In San Rafael he was arrested for peddling without a license and, after paying his fine, decided to stay.

He soon opened his first store on the southeastern corner of Fourth and B streets.

Speaking "basic Italian and Portuguese" Albert soon was selling sundries to Marin's early day multi-lingual population, according to his grandson, San Rafael merchant Warren Marcus.

The store was staffed by his wife, son and later two daughters, Alice and Bertha, 'who started working as soon as they could see over the counter," Marcus said.

Later the Wonder Store moved to the northeastern corner of Fourth and B and in 1917 into the first floor of the new Herzog-Rake building across the street.

In 1930 he erected the Albert building at the corner of Fourth and B streets, giving the city its first building with an elevator.

Seven years later Albert was elected to the San Rafael City Council on which he served until his death in 1946.

His interest in young people and sports prompted him to buy and present Albert Field to the city in 1937, his grandson said. Six years later, in 1943, he gave a piece of land at Second and A streets to the Marin Council of Boy Scouts, along with $20,000 to erect a building.

In 1942 he bought the corner of Fourth and Court streets where he built the Albert Department Store, then the largest store in tbhe county. When the store was sold to Macy's 10 years later, the Albert family retained ownership of the land.

At the time of his death at age 75, Albert owned department stores in San Anselmo, Napa, Mill Valley and Richmond.

His son Harry, appointed to fill Albert's vacant city council seat, carried on his father's work in developing downtown San Rafael.

Before his death at 70, in 1963, Harry Albert remodeled and built many downtown buildings.

The Independent-Journal, reporting his death on May 28, 1963, said that 'much of the face lifting of the downtown district in the past few years has been because of Harry Albert, who was in the forefront in remodeling properties to improve San Rafael's business climate, even buying old buildings to have them completely restored."

Sig Herzog—-Butcher To Big Businessman

Sigmund K. (Sig) Herzog, San Rafael's earlyday developer and its first elected mayor, was 5 when his father, Maximillian Herzog, opened a butcher shop in 1878 at Third and D streets.

The father had immigrated to New York from Germany, then came "round the Horn" to San Francisco between 1864 and 1866. There he married Augusta Kramer.

Herzog worked in a San Francisco butcher shop until chronic asthma forced him to move to San Rafael's warmer climate. The butcher shop prospered. In the 1890s Herzog was elected to the city's board of trustees.

The family, which eventually included seven children, resided in a large home on Fourth Street, east of the old county courthouse.

Sig Herzog grew up in San Rafael running errands for his father and working behind the butcher shop counter.

Soon after taking over the business, he realized that customers needed ice to keep their meats and perishables fresh. So he opened the Marin County Ice Co. in a building at the corner of Julia and B streets.

Two years after the 1906 earthquake brought hundreds of new residents to the city, Herzog and a partner, Elwood Rake, founded the S.K. Herzog Co., a family owned corporation still owned today by both families.

Rake, a self-taught school teacher from the Dakotas came to San Rafael before the turn of the centruy to work in the Fourth Street grocery store, owned by his uncle, Camille Grosjean. He later bought the market.

The partners, dabbling in real estate, purchased the Marin Hotel at Fourth and A streets, erected in 1871 by pioneer William J. Miller.

Later they bought the corner across the street where in 1931 the Herzog Co. erected the Rafael Theater.

Seventeen years ago Herzog's son and namesake erected the Herzog-Rake Building on the corner. Both properties, along with the adjacent building on A Street, are still owned by the S.K. Herzog Co.

After San Rafael becamse a charter city Herzog in 1915 became the first mayor elected by the voters.

In 1917 Herzog and Rake erected what was then the city's biggest building — the Aileen Apartments on the corner of Fourth and B streets.

Merchant Harry Albert, who met with the partners across the bridge table every afternoon, moved his flourishing dry goods store into the new building's street floor.

Three years later the three businessmen Herzog, Rake and Albert were among the founders of the San Rafael Chamber of Commerce.

In 1923 Herzog erected a new ice plant at 1556 Fourth Street and during the 1920s served as president of the Marin County Bank. This banking house, then located in the Cheda Building, is now part of Wells Fargo Bank.

Two years later Herzog moved a dairy operation he had started in 1906 on 1,600 acres in Sleepy Hollow to the banks of the Petaluma River, across the Sonoma County line.

The dairy now is operated by his son, Max Herzog. The Herzog Co. owns the property.

Elwood Rake, who drove one of the first electric cars in town in 1916 died in his early 60s in 1928.

Sig Herzog died in 1953, 17 days after celebrating his golden wedding anniversary. The home he built for his bride, Rebecca Lobree, in 1903, is now the site of Bell Savings and Loan Association.

City Employees Are Of All Ages

San Rafael's 320 city employees range in age from 18-year-old police cadet Brian Gottlieb to 66-year-old maintenance man Harold P. Hall.

Senior city employee is Police Chief Joseph J. Brusatori, who was hired in 1939. Employee with lowest seniority is groundsman John C. Church, hired last month.

Gold Discovery

A rich vein of gold-bearing quartz was discovered in San Rafael in the fall of 1857, according to a report in the Illustrated London News.

Summer Resort

The Daily Alta California reported on June 28, 1885, that "San Rafael offers many peculiar attractions as a summer resort. It lies on the wooded uplands of a picturesque valley, within convenient reach of the busy metropolitan city. . .The Bay and the city are at its feet. All the resources of the country are near at hand."

Wealthy Stayed At Albion House

San Rafael's Carmel Hotel once was a resort for wealthy San Franciscans wanting to get away from the turmoil and bustle of city life.

Then known as the Albion House, it advertised that its table "supplied with the choicest delicacies in season." The hotel still stands on B Street, between Second and Third streets.

Horse Penalities

In April, 1893 San Rafael's Board of Trustees was considering anordinance to penalize persons leaving horses unhitched on the town's streets.

When They Put Out The Lamps

A century before today's energy crisis, San Rafael residents put away their candles and kerosene lamps and began to look to gas for energy needs.

Gas-burning lights were installed along the streets in 1874 and homeowners began buying gas at $5 a cubic yard from Marin's pioneer utility entrepreneur, Allan Lee.

In 1871, 17 years after San Francisco became the first city in the West to light its streets with gas, Lee installed a Maxim gas producing machine in San Rafael.

His firm later merged with the Pacific Gas and Electric Co. which now provides 51,612 customers across the city with gas and electricity.

PG&E's North Bay Division headquarters, which serves the counties of Marin, Sonoma, Mendocino, Lake, Napa and part of Solano, is located at Third and Brooks streets where Lee founded the county's first utility company.

San Rafael's dirt streets were to remain in darkness until December 1874, when the first board of trustees (forerunner of today's city council) authorized Lee to install four gas lights, costing $30 each.

Soon afterwards, Lee erected his first gas plant at Third and Brooks. In 1876, J. O. Eldridge became a partner in the firm.

By 1883 the utility was known as the San Rafael Gas Co.

In 1887, eight years after the nation's first central electric plant was built in San Francisco, San Rafael's board of trustees gave Lee and Eldridge a $149,500 franchise to build an electric light plant.

Using $200,000 capital the partners formed the San Rafael Gas and Electric Co. Again, Lee was named president.

The new company hung brush arc lights from poles on downtown street corners that operated on a "moonlight schedule," when the moon was out, the lights went off.

In 1901 the local utility was merged with the California Central Gas and Electric Co. Four years later it merged with PG&E.

Today 1,487 men and women are employed by San Rafael's North Bay Division headquarters in San Rafael.

POOL-SWEEP®

AUTOMATIC POOL CLEANER

IT STARTED IN MARIN

In 1965, Andrew Pansini and Howard Arneson began with an idea, some tools and garage space, worked to perfect an automatic pool cleaner. Their first product had limitations; however, from this beginning, Howard Arneson designed and patented Pool-Sweep, a completely automatic pool cleaner that was adaptable to any pool size or shape. Marin pool owners were the first to be relieved of the tedious hand cleaning that was required up to this time. The first Pool-Sweeps were sold pool-to-pool in Marin. It started in Marin . . .

Howard Arneson

. . . AND SPREAD AROUND THE WORLD

Today Pool-Sweep is used in the fifty states and 10 countries of the world. In 1973 25,000 units were sold as compared to a dozen units in 1965. A manufacturing space of 60,000 feet is needed to meet the world's demand and 100 people make up the employment rolls of Arneson Products. Because of this volume, additional space is needed for the manufacture of Pool-Sweep, Chlor-Sweep (automatic chlorinating) and development of other products . . .

POOL-SWEEP PLANS LARGER HOME

Now in the planning stage is a new two-story building. The new building is designed to house the manufacturing, shipping, research and development labs on the ground floor. The top floor will be devoted to administration. The building will feature the latest aids for working ease and efficiency.

In prototype at the present time is a new Arneson floating dry dock that lifts the boat by a hydrolic mechanism operated by normal water pressure. In this manner a boat could literally be put in dry dock conditions every time it was docked at its home base.

Grady's Dairy: Success Story

Frank P. Grady, an Irishman from County Mayo, traveled to England as a boy to earn passage to the United States. He arrived in San Rafael in 1892 with $1 in his pocket.

Forty-one years later, at the Height of the depression the 62-year-old Grady started the Lucas Valley Dairy in San Rafael. The company would become Marin's largest independently-owned dairy before its sale in 1962 to the Petaluma Co-operative Creamery.

Three of Grady's children, Robert, Edward and Loretta, managed the San Rafael dairy after their father's death in 1947. The sons now are executives with the Petaluma-based firm that sells Clover brand dairy products in Marin and Sonoma counties.

Frank Grady was a disciplined, hardworking man who feared nothing, according to his son, Robert. He enrolled in a San Francisco night school soon after his arrival and during the day worked as a coachman for the Bothin family of Fairfax.

Later, working as a laborer in Tiburon for the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad, Grady saved $500 and opened a small feed and fuel business in 1898 at First and A streets.

His coachmen friends were among his best customers and, in 1908, he was able to expand the firm. He bought land at Fourth and Ida streets, and there built a large stable, hay barns and later opened an ice company.

In addition to his sons and daughter Loretta, Grady and his wife, Rose had two other daughters, Margaret and Frances.

All of the youngsters worked after school and on weekends in the family business. The sons swept sidewalks, dusted cleaned, loaded wagons and stacked and cleaned sacks. The daughters worked in the office.

Grady, a hunter since boyhood, joined the Victor Gun Club, "an old politicians'" hunting club, according to his son. It was located on Victor Sartori's 2,200-acre ranch in Upper Lucas Valley.

Here Grady and businessman Sigmund K. Herzog Sr., contractor Charlie Webber, Justice of the Peace Herbert De La Montanya and Marin County Supervisor William Gnoss hunted deer and quail during the season.

When Sartori put the ranch up for sale in 1926, Grady paid $45,000 for it to "keep the hunting rights," his son said.

Shortly afterwards, he joined a group of local ranchers in forming the Marin Dell Milk Co. And in 1933, at age 62, he started a dairy processing plant at Fourth and Ida streets, Naming it for his Lucas Valley ranch.

When the dairy was sold 12 years ago it was processing and selling 140,000 gallons of milk each day.

IT WAS A WINTER WONDER

On Jan. 9, 1913, San Rafael residents awakened to a real surprise — a blanket of snow lay about the town. While the white flakes are fairly common on Mount Tamalpais, they caused quite a stir in the valleys, bringing animals, children and amateur photographers spilling into the streets.

Frank Grady was a disciplined, hardworking man who feared nothing, according to his son, Robert. He enrolled in a San Francisco night school soon after his arrival and during the day worked as a coachman for the Bothin family of Fairfax.

Later, working as a laborer in Tiburon for the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad, Grady saved $500 and opened a small feed and fuel business in 1898 at First and A streets.

His coachmen friends were among his best customers and, in 1908, he was able to expand the firm. He bought land at Fourth and Ida streets, and there built a large stable, hay barns and later opened an ice company.

In addition to his sons and daughter Loretta, Grady and his wife, Rose had two other daughters, Margaret and Frances.

All of the youngsters worked after school and on weekends in the family business. The sons swept sidewalks, dusted cleaned, loaded wagons and stacked and cleaned sacks. The daughters worked in the office.

Grady, a hunter since boyhood, joined the Victor Gun Club, "an old politicians'" hunting club, according to his son. It was located on Victor Sartori's 2,200-acre ranch in Upper Lucas Valley.

Here Grady and businessman Sigmund K. Herzog Sr., contractor Charlie Webber, Justice of the Peace Herbert De La Montanya and Marin County Supervisor William Gnoss hunted deer and quail during the season.

When Sartori put the ranch up for sale in 1926, Grady paid $45,000 for it to "keep the hunting rights," his son said.

Shortly afterwards, he joined a group of local ranchers in forming the Marin Dell Milk Co. And in 1933, at age 62, he started a dairy processing plant at Fourth and Ida streets, Naming it for his Lucas Valley ranch.

When the dairy was sold 12 years ago it was processing and selling 140,000 gallons of milk each day.

IT WAS A WINTER WONDER

On Jan. 9, 1913, San Rafael residents awakened to a real surprise — a blanket of snow lay about the town. While the white flakes are fairly common on Mount Tamalpais, they caused quite a stir in the valleys, bringing animals, children and amateur photographers spilling into the streets.

McPhail's Stable Grew To Industry

At the end of San Rafael's horse and buggy days, a Canadian-born livery stable owner and his son founded a small fuel company that grew into McPhail's Inc., a multi-million dollar firm that sells everything from applicances to building materials across Marin and Sonoma counties.

Neil McPhail, a 25-year-old native of Prince Edward Island, had farmed, studied dentistry and operated a Seattle restaurant and Oakland livery stable before he opened a stable in San Rafael in 1884.

The business, located in a two-story building at the corner of Fourth and B streets, accommodated both horses and their rigs.

Soon McPhail rigs and teams were carrying railroad surveyors and Pacific Gas and Electric Co. workmen to jobs across town. His most lucrative trade was renting coaches to socialities spending summers at the old Hotel Rafael.

His marriage to Katie Ann Murchison produced three children, Graham, John and Belle McPhail.

In 1922, when the automobile was putting the horse out of business, McPhail and his younger son, John MacPhail who had adopted the original Scottish "Mac" spelling of the name) opened a fuel business in the stable, then located on C Street.

At first the father sawed wood into logs in the rear of the shop and the son trucked the wood to customers across town.

When the elder son, Graham McPhail, joined the firm as a salesman in 1926, John MacPhail became office manager and bookkeeper.

Soon the firm was selling fuel oil, operating an oil burner maintenance department and selling building materials and appliances.

An aggregate plant was built in 1935 on the canal side of Francisco Boulevard. One of its first jobs was to pour concrete for the Golden Gate Bridge.

Four years later the firm secured a cement contract for construction of the San Rafael overpass and by 1940 McPhail ready-mix trucks were delivering cement to construction jobs across the county.

The company opened a plant in Santa Rosa in 1938 to sell appliances and serve as Northern base for fuel oil trucks serving Sonoma County.

By 1946 another store had opened in Petaluma; four years later a new building and appliance store opened in San Rafael on the corner of C and Third streets.

John MacPhail Sr., died in 1953 at age 51 and his father in 1955 at 92. John's son and namesake now is the corporation's executive vice president; John's older brother Graham McPhail, is chairman of the board.

Today the $8 million corporation sells major household appliances, fuels, sand, rock, cement, brick, heating and air conditioning units.

It owns two retail appliance stores — the main San Rafael outlet at Third and C streets and one in Santa Rosa at Seventh Street and Mendocino Avenue.

A retail and wholesale outlet for appliances opened last year in Petaluma on Lakeville Street.

The tire business has changed - because the type cars people are driving has changed. Smaller cars are more demanding on tires than a bigger car. A lot of people are driving imported cars for the first time, and do not really understand the tire types or sizes they are using. Most tire dealers don't know how to advise you either - because they have only been exposed to American sizings. Most dealers for example don't know a 615 x 13 tire is smaller than a 600-13 tire. Most dealers don't know that a 185-70-13 radial is about 2½ inches shorter than a 185-13 radial.

I see an awful lot of 240Zs, Capris, Fiats, Toyotas, Mercedes, etc., with wrong tire size application.

Fire Department—From Bucket Brigades To Modernity

By DOROTHY GARDINER

The San Rafael Fire Department has come a long way in the last 100 years.

Organized as a volunteer hose company eight months after San Rafael's incorporation, it has grown from colorful volunteer bucket brigades to highly trained professional firefighters.

Until the city established a paid department around World War I, firefighting was handled by one or two fulltime firemen and all the volunteers the alarm might bring streaming from homes, downtown stores and saloons.

Fire traditionally was the biggest fear of 19th Century towns across the Western frontier and San Rafael was no exception.

Even before laying streets and sidewalks, installing gas street lights or building an animal pound (for $4) and a town jail, San Rafael in October 1874, spent more than $1,000 on firefighting equipment. A month later officials empowered town trustee Joseph Burton Rice to organize a volunteer hose company.

Rice, an enterprising 38-year-old former New Englander, organized the volunteers on Dec. 3, 1874.

He was elected the hose company's chairman; Jerome Barney, founding editor of the Marin County Journal, was named secretary and James Tunstead, a man "of determined Irish character," chosen foreman.

The volunteers' ranks were filled by grocers, merchants, saloon keepers, tradesmen, liverymen and other able-bodied men of the community.

Early equipment consisted of one hand-drawn hose cart, built by the Marin Carriage Manufacturing Co. for $150.

It carried 600 feet of "Weaver and Taylor hose," 11 connections, one pipe and two nozzles, for which the town had spent $987. (San Rafael's treasury at the time held some $10,000 of borrowed money).

The volunteers immediately asked the trustees for additional rope and reel, which they received. Eight days later the board ordered a $375 hook and ladder from the local carriage maker.

Carnival Days

In the early years of this century carnivals coming to San Rafael pitched tents in an empty lot on Lootens Place near Fifth Avenue. Here youngsters for 25 cents could visit sideshows, touch a boa constrictor and ride a ferris wheel and merry-go-round.

The following March the hose company moved into San Rafael's first firehouse on the first floor of the newly constructed town hall. The hall, built by lumber mill owner Isaac Shaver was on the west side of C Street between Fourth Street and Fifth Avenue.

Here "philosophers of the small-beer school sat in the evening and chewed over local politics," according to the Independent-Journal of Feb. 19, 1948.

A few months later the town paid $125 for a fire bell that was hung atop the town hall by Shaver, who was paid $50 for building a belfry.

When the bell sounded (it was usually rung by Edward (Ned) Eden whose funeral parlor was across the street) the volunteers, pulling the hose cart behind, raced on foot to the scene of the fire.

Needless to say, during the ensuing melees, many structures were lost. But somehow the pioneer volunteers always seemed to keep the fires from leveling the town.

The company's second hose cart was ordered in April, 1876. The following June trustees outlawed fireworks and passed a resolution asking firemen and "all good citizens to use utmost diligence on and about the Fourth of July" to protect the town from blazes.

(Notwithstanding, one of the town's worst fires occurred on that date in 1886, destroying the Bay View Hotel at Third and C Streets).

Early fire chiefs included shoemaker William Bankenberg, 1882; carpenter Al Moorehead, 1886, and plumber Miles Conway, 1887.

When the volunteers weren't fighting fires, they were planning the town's major civic events — annual Washington's Birthday balls, parades and Fourth of July picnics at Laurel Grove Park (today's Bret Harte).

After the turn of the century San Rafael began to modernize its fire company.

A team of horses, named Tom and Jerry, was purchased in 1908 to help haul equipment, including a four-wheel pumper.

The horses made their first "official run" on Friday, the 13th of March, 1908, according to the Marin Journal.

DANIEL SCHNEIDER

CLARENCE M. JOHANSEN
San Rafael fire chief

As the team galloped to a house fire at 122 Palm Avenue "the whirl down Fourth Street kicked up such great clouds of dust that pedestrians were almost choked and the team could not be seen 50 feet away."

But the blaze was "quickly" extinguished, the Journal reported, due to efforts of the horses. "Had the boys been forced to make the long run on foot the fire would have perhaps been beyond quenching," the newspaper said.

As equipment grew more sophisticated, the horses pulled a variety of vehicles to fires, including a wagon carrying three-gallon chemical tanks containing soda and acid, according to the late Fire Chief Clarence M. (Fritz) Johansen. (Johansen, the son of Chief Martie Johansen, gew up in the department. The elder Johansen died in 1932 after suffering a heart attack while fighting a fire at Fourth and D streets).

The department's first motorized apparatus, a Pope Hartford fire truck, was added in 1914. By 1920 Chief Daniel Schneider was driving a Buick.

(In the 1920s the horses were sold to a San Anselmo coal dealer. Every time the firm alarm went off, so did the horses, arriving at the scene with their new owner a helpless passenger at the reins).

In 1917, according to the late Fred J. Scheuer, who became the first fulltime paid chief in 1945, there were only two other fulltime firemen besides himself.

There were 16 to 18 fire alarm boxes throughout the town and a big whistle atop the station that called volunteers to action.

That year the department moved into the main firehouse (still located at Fifth and C) on property sold to the city by volunteer William Vaning.

The next year his son, retired Batallion Chief Walker B. Vaning, joined the force as a fulltime fireman. He remembers getting one day off out of every 14 and spending every other night at home (then and now located just around the corner).

In those days fires were often fought with wet sacks and shovels, he said, and firemen climbed over the hills on foot to get to blazes.

By the late 1940s San Rafael had 13,000 residents and the fire department had grown to 13 fulltime men. Equipment included five pumper trucks, a 400-gallon water tank, a ladder truck and a rescue vehicle with first aid and resuscitation apparatus.

But it took a disaster a decade later to turn the department into a highly trained unit.

FIRE WAGON — A single fire truck stands ready for action in front of the San Rafael Fire Station on Fifth Avenue and C Street, where it has been since 1917. The fire station has been enlarged since that time, and the fire fighting equipment has been beefed up to the point where it is today worth nearly $800,000.

On July 29, 1957 buildings on two sides of Fourth Street, between D and E streets, were destroyed in a $2 million fire that brought out firemen and equipment from as far away as Oakland and San Francisco.

City fathers became alarmed and began "beefing-up" the local department.

Vance Trivett, 45-year-old captain with the Ventura Fire Department, was hired in 1958 as assistant chief. (He succeeded Johansen as chief two years later).

Trivett's assignment was to train firemen.

A drill tower was added to a second station house under construction at Third and Union streets. Here Trivett began to train and drill men in up-to-date firefighting techniques.

Regular inspections were started and firemen visited buildings in high value districts to learn how to enter and leave in case of emergency.

New station houses were built across the city—on Castro Avenue, San Pedro Road and Joseph Court in Terra Linda. A sixth on Del Ganado Road, was acquired last year with the annexation of the Terra Linda Community Service District).

During the past 16 years the fulltime force has grown from approximately 30 to more than 90, according to Fire Marshall J. Kenneth Mazza. Today there always are 26 men on 24-hour duty across the city.

(As the professional force has grown the volunteers have diminished. Currently, there is only one volunteer fireman in the department).

Today's equipment is worth close to $800,000, said Mazza and includes eight engines, a $110,000 rescue rig; a $100,000 aerial truck and two vehicles used to fight grass fires.

The days of the proverbial pinochle-playing fireman are gone. Men work from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. spending 56 hours a week on duty. This includes 24-hour shifts when the men may not leave the firehouse without permission.

The emphasis on training, drills and inspections has continued under Trivett's successor, Chief Robert Marcucci, 35, a second generation fireman.

Recruits (who must be 21) spend at least a month studying firefighting techniques and fire chemistry.

Extensive first aid training is given to prepare men to administer mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, treat burns and extricate accident victims trapped in automobiles.

Recruits are placed on probation for one year. During that period they are expected to learn all city streets and roads, all equipment, radio codes, arson investigation, advanced first aid and the city's water system.

Recently engine companies have started visiting private homes to offer free safety inspections as part of a new fire prevention program, according to Mazza.

At the end of the department's 100th anniversary celebration this year, its oldest tradition will end.

"The volunteers will not accept any new members . . . that's it," the chief said.

The days of the proverbial pinochle-playing fireman are gone. Men work from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. spending 56 hours a week on duty. This includes 24-hour shifts when the men may not leave the firehouse without permission.

The emphasis on training, drills and inspections has continued under Trivett's successor, Chief Robert Marcucci, 35, a second generation fireman.

Recruits (who must be 21) spend at least a month studying firefighting techniques and fire chemistry.

Extensive first aid training is given to prepare men to administer mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, treat burns and extricate accident victims trapped in automobiles.

Recruits are placed on probation for one year. During that period they are expected to learn all city streets and roads, all equipment, radio codes, arson investigation, advanced first aid and the city's water system.

Recently engine companies have started visiting private homes to offer free safety inspections as part of a new fire prevention program, according to Mazza.

At the end of the department's 100th anniversary celebration this year, its oldest tradition will end.

"The volunteers will not accept any new members . . . that's it," the chief said.

Carnival Days

In the early years of this century carnivals coming to San Rafael pitched tents in an empty lot on Lootens Place near Fifth Avenue. Here youngsters for 25 cents could visit sideshows, touch a boa constrictor and ride a ferris wheel and merry-go-round.

FIRE WAGON — A single fire truck stands ready for action in front of the San Rafael Fire Station on Fifth Avenue and C Street, where it has been since 1917. The fire station has been enlarged since that time, and the fire fighting equipment has been beefed up to the point where it is today worth nearly $800,000.
